A VACCINATION CREED

A few years ago the Department of health of Chicago made the following declaration of their faith jn vaccinatjon.

1st. That true vaccinatjon, repeated until it no longer 'takes' always prevens smallpox. Nothing else does.

2nd. That true vaccination—that js vaccination, properly done on a clean arm with pure lymph and kept perefctly clean and unbroken afterwards,never did and never will make a serious sore.

3rd. That such vaccination leaves a characteristic scar, unljke that of any ofther cuse ,which js reocgnizable during life, and is the only conclusjve eveidence of a successful vaccinaton.

4th— That no untoward results ever follow such vaccinatjon; on the other hand thousands of lives are annually sacrjficed through the neglect to vaccinate— a neglect begotten of lack of knowledge.

NOTE— The Klemme doctors have vaccinated a number of adults and several school children, during the last few days, which is as it should be, we have no cases of smallpox in our community as yet. and if every body vaccinates there won't be any —Small pox is a loathsome disease and we do not want it in Klemme— Let's vaccjnate.

Arthur Wellemeyer
Pres. of School Board.

700 Cases of Small Pox at Mason City

It is reported that there are seven hundred cases of small pox at Mason City, and that a number of deahs have occured.. The city health Department are takjng every precaution to curb the dreaded disease and have issued the followjng waring in the Globe-Gazette.

Have You Been Vaccinated?

Owing to the fact that smallpo is very prevalent in the state of Minnesota and that some cases exjst jn this city, I want o urge every person as a precauionary measure to get vaccjnated jmmediately. If eample of the school children. 2,600 of whom, out of 3000 have been vaccinted, is followed there will be little danger of either an incrase or a fatality of the disease in the city. The old saying that 'Prevention is always cheaper and better than cure' is one that should be heeded at this timee by all citizens in Mason City and Cerro Gordo county who irrespedtive of age or whether at some time vaccination did not 'take' should at once consult their family physician and become vaccjnated. I cannot urge the ecessity of vacciation too strongly a his time as a preventive measure."

Dr. C. W. Hubbard,
City Health Officer.

Vaccination Made Prerequisite to School Attendance

Algona— All school children must be vaccinated for small pox before January 5 when school again convenes, or teachers will refuse to allow children to attend classes. The decision was made by the school board to prevent on epidemic of the djsease which has been widespread in neighboring towns for several weeks.

BIG ARMS CACHE FOUND IN BERLIN

Depot of Rifles and Machine Gun Barrels Discovered, Says Report.

Paris.—A depot of rifles and machine-gun barrels has been discovered in Berlin by officials from the inter-allied control commission, according to a story in Echo de Paris, quoting an "incontrovertible informant" in Germany.

It is declared that an inventory now being taken has accounted for 40,000 barrels, and it is expected that the total will reach about 100,000. A cunningly devised hiding place held the find, it is announced.

It is the demand of the French that evacuation of the Cologne bridgehead be deferred because of the discovery of arms manufactured clandestinely and other violations of the treaty provisions. The British have based their decision on the fact that the final report of the mission is not completed and that the evacuation should not take place before it is ready for submission.

It is believed in political circles that the final decision of the British, after the receipt of the report, will be to evacuate, while Premier Herriot, who is known to be inclined to favor the same action, would encounter many difficulties in the Paris parliament should he approve the evacuation in the face of the recent discoveries of the mission.

The premier has made the declaration that on the question of German disarmament, "we shall be very vigilant," but he has also announced that the final report of the control commission and the final action of the ambassadors' council will be awaited.

It is stated that M. Herriot is compelled to believe, however, that the discoveries of the control commission leave no doubt that important quantities of arms are being made and concealed in Germany.

Although a stern attitude on the part of France will risk the upsetting of the policy of conciliation toward the reich, it is felt the chances are that he will be unable to do otherwise than insist that the control commission be maintained until it is satisfied that Germany is disarmed and remains in that status, and that in the meantime the Cologne area must remain under the occupation of the allies.

Woman in Auto Crash Carried on Engine Pilot

Indianapolis, Ind.—Thrown onto the pilot of the Knickerbocker special, fast Big Four passenger train, when the engine crashed into an automobile in which she was riding at a crossing, Mrs. Kenneth Clark, eighteen, of this city, was carried 12 miles until she fell into a ditch near Oaklandon, Ind.

She was not seriously injured, but suffered from exposure to the subzero weather.

Mrs. Clyde Clark, her mother-in-law, was killed and Kenneth Clark, twenty-two, her husband, and Clyde Clark, her brother-in-law, were injured when the train struck the automobile. A baby twenty months old was hurled unhurt from the automobile. The engine crew did not know the automobile had been struck.

"I've thanked God a thousand times that I'm alive," Mrs. Clark said as she lay on a hospital cot.

May Wheat Crosses $1.81 Mark at Chicago Market

Chicago.—The $1.81 line was surpassed by wheat on Friday with May selling at $1.81¼ and December at $1.77¼. This was a jump of more than 4 cents from the close Wednesday.

The rise was the highest price at this season in years and under normal conditions has seldom been exceeded at any time. During the war it sold as high as $3.18 to a settlement price in 1917 when trading was stopped, while cash wheat in December, 1919, and in January of 1920 sold at $3.50, which was the highest on record.

Wheat at Winnipeg went to $1.89 for May, while recently it was selling below the Chicago prices.

Leaders in trade forecast a price of $2 for wheat within a short time unless the foreign situation changes decidedly.

SEAPLANE SWAMPED; FOUR LOSE LIVES

Naval Ambulance Wrecked at Hampton Roads.

Norfolk, Va.—Three navy men and a civilian met death here when a naval ambulance seaplane returning from off the North Carolina coast with a hospital patient was swamped at the Hampton Roads naval air station landing.

The dead are: E. M. Keyser and A. S. Manwaring, chief petty officers; P. S. Gavin, a hospital apprentice, and Landrew Williams of Buxton, N. C. Williams was being brought to a Norfolk hospital for treatment for pneumonia.

U. B. Williams, father of the civilian victim of the wreck; Lieut. W. B. Gwin, pilot, a radio operator and a mechanic escaped.

The wreck was attributed to the probable existence of a hole in the bow of the plane, which allowed the water to rush into the forward part of the airship when it glided to the water at the landing station. Only the forward portion of the plane was inundated. Two of the navy men, trying to escape aft, were struck by the propellers and killed. The other victims were drowned.

The plane's nose dive beneath the surface was witnessed from shore. At the pier a motorboat was waiting to assist in landing the sick man and the crew of the plane.

Chicago Prosecutor to Probe McClintock's Death

Chicago.—William Nelson McClintock's body was ordered lifted from its nearly fresh gave in Oakwoods cemetery by State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe and Coroner Oscar Wolff. An exhaustive inquiry was begun, prompted, the officials said, by a chain of seeming peculiarities which ended with the young millionaire orphan's death on December 4 last.

Thus again is singled out for emphasis the legend of the McClintock fortune, whose holders have been short lived in its possession. Billy McClintock, the last of his line, was holder of the $1,000,000 fortune just eight months when he died, a few hours before he was to have become the husband of Miss Isabelle Pope of 910 Lake avenue, Wilmette.

Mr. Shepherd, to whom the bulk of the McClintock fortune was willed, when reached by long-distance telephone at Albuquerque, N. M., stated that the boy "died a natural death and there is no reason for an investigation."

33 PERISH IN FIRE SANTA STARTED

Score Also Injured at Christmas Entertainment at Hobart, Okla.

Hobart, Okla.—With the identification of the last victim established, the death list in the Christmas eve fire at the Babb Switch rural school stands at thirty-three.

Twenty injured persons are still confined in two hospitals. One is expected to die and two others are in a critical condition.

Death entered the Christmas celebration suddenly, cutting off at its height the program rendered by the children of the neighborhood. The last little girl had spoken her "piece" and a jolly Santa in red suit and furs had distributed to each chubby pair of eager hands a little sack of candy, while parents and friends who packed the small one-room structure to capacity looked on.

Santa reached for one of the few remaining candy sacks. His arm struck a candle on the Christmas tree. The blazing candle fell from its meager perch, and in an instant a ball of cotton on the tree burst into flame. A rush to put out the fire, and the tree fell over, scattering blazing twigs.

In an instant the room was in a panic. Men and women sprang for the single exit at the rear and to the windows, beating out the panes, only to find the openings covered by a heavy wire netting. The windows shattered, a brisk wind blew through the room, fanning the flames, and the flimsy structure caught like kindling.

Many were crushed in the jam before the door and it is believed that most of those who perished had been injured before the flames found them.

The dead are: Perry Biggers, Bud Biggers, Dowell Bolding, seventeen; Mattie Bolding, thirteen; Edward Bolding, ten; Mrs. Rhoda Bradshow, Mattie May Bryan, T. C. Coffee, Mrs. T. C. Coffee, Maud Coffee, Audrey Coffee, Orley Coffee, Ethel Coffee, William Curtis, thirty-four; Mrs. W. Curtis, thirty-two; Lois Clements, twenty-three; Gladys Clements, twenty-two; John Duke, Jr. (child), Mary E. Eden (child), J. T. Goforth, John Hetzenberger, Mrs. Florence Hill, teacher of Babb Switch school; Vesta Jackson, Opal Peck, Cyril Peck (child), Paul Peck (child), Curtis Peterson, Lynn Reville, Lilia Reville, Mrs. Juanita Stevenson of Fort Worth, Texas; Mary Stevenson, daughter of Juanita.

Appeal for Troops in Vera Cruz Strike

Mexico City.—It is believed that only orders for military protection of members of the Maritime league desiring to work will protect that body from a clash with members of the Railwaymen's confederation in the serious labor troubles at Vera Cruz.

It was recently decided by Labor Minister Morones that the league workers should be reinstated in their employment, and a note was sent the Vera Cruz Terminal company that all railway men, stevedores and other workers who were let out last year in accordance with the pact settling the long conflict would return to employment.

This means that about 500 members of the confederation would lose their jobs, and the confederation decided upon a strike.

An appeal for troops was sent to the military commandant at Vera Cruz, but he has refused to act until he receives orders from President Calles.

STATE COMMANDER BUSY LEGION MAN

Plattsburg was a name to conjure with in the early days of the World war. And its fame has been added to since that first girding for the struggle with the Central Powers by the activities of the men who were trained there.

One of the lads who entered the first training camp at Plattsburg—he was a law student of barely twenty-four years on that May day in 1917—was Harold K. Davison of Woodsville, N. H. Commissioned a second lieutenant on August 15, 1917, he reported for duty with the One Hundred and First infantry in the Twenty-Sixth Yankee division on September 1. Five days later he sailed for France.

Harold K. Davison.

For nineteen months he saw active duty in that war-torn country. He was at Chemin des Dames, at Chateau Thierry and at Verdun. He was gassed slightly in the Toul sector. On March 6, 1918, he was awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French government. Three times he was cited in division orders. He was promoted to first lieutenant on August 13, 1918, and recommended for a captaincy before his discharge at Camp Devens on April 29, 1919.

Returning home, he studied law for a year, supplementing the two years he had had at Harvard Law school following his graduation at Dartmouth in 1915. He is a practicing attorney at Woodsville. For four years he has been a member of the New Hampshire legislature.

Mr. Davison was one of the organizers and also first commander of Tracy Ross Post, No. 20, of the American Legion in Woodsville. He has served on various state committees. He was elected senior vice commander for 1924 and in May was chosen as commander to succeed a commander who had resigned. He was unanimously re-elected at the annual state convention. He has attended as a New Hampshire delegate the national conventions at Minneapolis, New Orleans, San Francisco and St. Paul. "I am already planning," he says, "to attend the next convention at Omaha, which I anticipate will be the biggest convention yet."

Post Disapproves Plan of Disabled Veterans

Mayor Baker was advised recently by the executive committee of the American Legion post of Portland, Ore., that the organization opposes the granting of permits to veterans to sell postal cards on the streets, even if those veterans are disabled. The stand of the post was taken when Mayor Baker referred the application of three disabled veterans, who were traveling about in a car designed like a locomotive to attract attention, to the local post of the Legion for consideration. The post explained that the American Legion will make every effort to get compensation for disabled veterans, will pass their cases through the United States Veterans' bureau and will find jobs for men who need them, but it does not approve of methods of this kind for raising funds.

Would Name Dirigible for American Legion

"American Legion" is the name suggested to Secretary Wilbur of the Navy department for the German built dirigible ZR-3, by the American Legion post at Bellmore, N. Y. In regard to the naming of the giant dirigible, recently arrived in this country, as part of the reparations program, a Legion official here declared:

"In the name 'American Legion' for our newest air acquisition there would be no regional dissatisfaction inasmuch as the Legion is a national organization, extending from coast to coast. The name is especially fitting when one considers that both the ZR-3 and the American Legion are the outgrowth of the World war."

Will Locate and Mark Illinois Heroes' Graves

The military and naval department of the state of Illinois is compiling a record of the burial places of all soldiers, sailors, marines and army nurses of all wars who are buried in Illinois. The plan is to mark every grave appropriately and to aid patriotic organizations to locate and decorate graves on memorial days. The American Legion, department of Illinois, has been asked to assist in locating unmarked graves of veterans and to send in the locations of all marked graves so that the exact spot of every ex-service person's grave in the state may be charted. The United States government furnishes headstones for graves of its war dead upon request.

Collectors Now Seek 'Treen'

The latest of collecting hobbies appears to be that of "treen," and not a few persons of average general information have wondered what particular curio is implied. For those who are wanting to find objects not as yet too eagerly sought, it may be explained that the term covers old wooden plates, dishes and bowls, and the Century dictionary points out its relation to the more familiar "trencher."—London Telegraph.

Starting the New Year

The New Year

By Edith Livingston Smith

THE New Year—where it leads and whom concerning
We cannot see,
We scan the path and full our hearts of yearning
And mystery—
What will it yield, this lane of sudden turning,
To you and me?

Grant we may find our share of sunlight streaming—
Come tears—come mirth;
Where faith in man shall make life's good deeds seeming
Of noble worth;
Give days our toil and give our nights sweet dreaming,
God of the earth.

Give us the heart to tread the way, not knowing
A vale or height;
Give us of cheer that God, His grace bestowing,
May guide us right;
Grant we may love the others with us going—
Old Year—Good night!

Things We Forgot During Past Year

Let Others Remember Our Good Deeds—It Is the Better Way.

By MARTHA BANNING THOMAS

VERY likely many of the things we have forgotten during the past year, are the things that other people remember best. It generally works by the law of opposites.

Thus: "I never got so much comfort out of anything in my life as that warm waist you gave me; cold mornings it's as good as a fire."

"What warm waist?" you answer, puzzled. "Why, that dark blue one you gave me; don't you remember?" says the young married woman who has four children and lives up the back road from your village.

No, you can't remember, but you're glad she's got it.

And thus: "Say, you saved my life that day when you picked me up on the road."

"What day?"

"That drizzling, cold, raw afternoon last winter. I'd been shopping downtown and started to walk home, because it's an actual fact I'd spent every cent before I knew it, and hadn't even a car fare. I was just about done up, when you hailed me and asked me to get in your car. I never was so glad to see anyone in my life!"

And thus: "I've read that book you gave me five times and now I'm on my fifth."

"What book?"

"That book of poems you sent me when I was so sick. I like poetry but don't feel as though I ought to spend money on it; sort of selfish when there's so much want in the world. But I tell you, those lovely lines keep singing in my head and are like meat and drink to me."

You can't recollect to save your life about that book, but you are grateful for the dear old lady's words.

Ma and Pa Decide Old Home Is O. K.

Aged Parents, Anticipating Happiest Year, Refuse New Bungalow.

By EMILY BURKS ADAMS

THE train was later than usual. Mrs. Owen often looked at her watch and asked the conductor if they were making up any time.

"New Year's Day, and still on the train, when we were due at Oklahoma City last night! Mother will be so disappointed that we're not there, Bob."

"Well dear, she knows the train is late."

"Yes, Bob, but the knowledge of a thing doesn't keep it from being disappointing; I'm so tired, too; I can hardly wait until I get there."

"Just think of the wonderful gift we nave for them and how happy we are going to make them, dear—a nice little home by us. We'll have them always with us, Madge."

"Oh! Bob, you're just wonderful! Father will be delighted with Chicago and mother will enjoy her new home."

The train puffed into Oklahoma City. The first person Madge and Bob saw was Father Canton, leaning on his cane, looking up and down the vast throngs as they gayly hurried by.

Oh, there he is, Bob! I can't wait to tell him of our plans. This will be my happiest New Year—taking them home with us.

"Father, so glad to see you! How is mother?" Madge shouted.

"Howdy, Bob. Howdy. Oh, mother's as fine as a fiddle; dinner's all on the table. Don't think she went to bed last night; she was just sure you'd had a wreck."

"I knew, dad, she'd be uneasy. Oh! we have the best present for you. We—"

"I hope it's a suit of clothes—I need one," interrupted Mr. Canton.

All laughed. They took a cab and were soon at the old home.

"My, mother, how good the turkey smells! We're so hungry and travel weary, but before we eat, or anything, I want to tell you about your new home Bob and I bought for you—right next to us. We're going to take you back with us. You can sell this place later. Bob and I have it all furnished for you.

"Bob, you carve the turkey," said Mr. Canton; "Madge has taken my breath. What's the matter? I think you're crazy instead of wild, Madge! How long has she been this way, Bob?"

"But, father, you'll go; of course you will. This place is old, and we want to take care of you."

"Now, see here, children, not while I have two feet and this cane to lean on. Ma and I were never happier in our lives. We'll take you and Bob in. We're able to take care of ourselves."

"You won't go, mother, father?"

In one voice they said—"No."

A happy week was spent together but Bob and Madge returned alone to see the new bungalow instead of the old home place.

"Well, Bob, I don't know but that the folks are right and as they said: This may be the happiest year of their lives. Happiness comes from within, and now that I know they are so attached to that place I shall not worry about them. I just hope that when we are in our eighties we'll love each other and our home just as much as they love theirs—I have an idea we'll tell our children just as they told us—that they are crazy. True, I suppose, you can't transplant old people."

Although the White House lawn was devoid of snow, the President and Mrs. Coolidge decided to try their first pair of skis, a Christmas gift from the members of the National Ski Association of America, who also extended them an invitation to attend the ski meet at Canton, S. EXPERT WITH X-RAY

Lady Constance Butler, well-known English society woman, has turned to surgery as an outlet of her energies. So well has she succeeded that she has become an X-ray specialist, and is probably the only titled woman to have entire charge of that department in a hospital. She received her first practical experience during the war, first at the Cambridge hospital, Aldershot, then at Ascot, and finally at Ellerman hospital. It was while there that she was asked to take charge of the X-ray department in the St. Andrew's hospital. Lady Constance is the daughter of the late marquis of Ormonde and niece of the present holder of that title.

Community Building

Move to Encourage Ownership of Homes

"To encourage and facilitate home building, reduce needless burdens in household operations, raise standards not only of the home, but of the community and the nation, is a task of profound importance for the welfare of America," declares Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, president of Better Homes in America, in an opening statement concerning Better Homes week demonstrations for 1925, which will be held May 10 to 17.

Mr. Hoover's statement is made in a foreword to the "Better Homes Guide Book," issued by the organization of which he is the head, which tells how communities may be organized for better homes demonstrations. In the last three and a half years the Better Homes of America organization has reached a steadily increasing number of communities and urged importance of encouraging home building and home owning.

"It is in the home," says Mr. Hoover, "that character and high ideals are best developed. The right kind of home life makes for true success in life and means progress for the nation as a whole.

"To own a home and to make it convenient and attractive, a home where health and happiness, affection and loyalty prevail, brings out the best that lies in every member of the family.

"Saving for home ownership, for instance, develops thrift and self-denial. A thing of lasting value is kept in the foreground and all energies are bent toward attaining it. Hours devoted to keeping a home in good repair, in making improvements that beautify it or lighten the burden of housekeeping, develop persistence and thoroughness and bring more direct returns as well. Neatness, order and cleanliness are invaluable habits, and the careful observation and forethought needed to insure lasting satisfaction from money spent for decoration, furnishing and equipment can be applied in many other ways."

Skillful Remodeling Adds Life to Structure

Remodeling of old houses has become more general today than in years. Many dwellings in the United States offer opportunity for improvements to make them more attractive, larger and more in line with present architectural design. These changes generally can be made at a comparatively small cost, considering the value added to the house itself.

Among the changes which can be made is the addition of dormer windows, which not only break up the monotony of the roof expanse, but make available additional room space under the roof. A treatment suggested for houses having a rather drab exterior is the use of a porch or porches. The many different styles available, as shown in dwellings erected in recent years, offer opportunity for improving the appearance of the home, and usually at a moderate cost.

Greater balance in the general scheme of a house frequently can be obtained through the construction of a small addition on one end or additions to both ends. Change in the roof plan, whereby a purely two-story dwelling is converted into a semi-bungalow type with low-hanging eaves, now in great favor, is another alteration that may do much to make the house of more modern appearance, with a consequent increase in selling value.

Realty Investments

The constantly growing demand for property justifies consistent increases in the prices paid for holdings, for, after all, the value of real estate is determined by the service it renders to an individual, industry or community, just like anything else. Therefore, the trend of property values is ever upward and always will be, was the assertion made by a prominent Detroit real estate man recently.

There isn't a single individual who cannot look back for a period of years of greater or lesser extent, and recall property which went begging at any price, and yet today that same piece of land is worth a fortune. This is true of the neighborhood, the city, state, nation and of the world.

Strengthens Family Ties

No family can ever feel for a rented house that deep-seated affection which is naturally developed for a home they own. There is little incentive to adorn and beautify the house and the yard which belong to another.

But when the place that shelters the family group is their own, every added beauty, every tree and shrub and flower planted adds new charm and binds the happy hearts.

Homebuilding Progress

Progress made in homebuilding since the days of the pioneers to the beginning of the Twentieth century can be termed little more than normal. It merely followed the general trend of educational and industrial development, but occasionally took erratic turns with resultant structures that were chiefly notable for their shocking extravagance in design and use of materials. Much of that has been done away with by the builders of the last few decades.

Warm Current Exists, No Matter How Called

It was with some consternation that one read in the newspapers that the gulf stream had been proved a myth. If one of the sacred scientific trinity had died, what was to become of the others—the nebular hypothesis and the law of gravitation?

A closer reading, however, was reassuring. remarks the New York Evening Mail. It appears that M. Le Danois a French savant, asserts that there is no such thing as a gulf stream. What is called by that name is a combination of ocean tides.

There are, he says, two kinds of water in the North Atlantic, warm and cold. The warm moves in a northward current to some undetermined point and turns backward again. The fluctuations, however, are tidal.

One has a vague memory of reading something very like that in the physical geography book about twenty years ago. Apparently the phenomena exist, whether one explains them by the term gulf stream or as ocean tides. That which we call a gulf stream by another name will smell as sweet to migratory herring and sardine and, happily, one can still paraphrase "Romeo and Juliet" regardless of whether Bacon or Shakespeare wrote it. And the warm Atlantic current still saves Europe from a return to the glacial period regardless of whether one accept the nomenclature of Franklin or that of M. Le Danois.

Early United States Official Given Honor

The 1922 series of $10 gold certificates bears the likeness of Michael Hillegas, the first treasurer of the United States. The germ of the Treasury department was planted on July 29, 1775, when the Continental congress appointed two treasurers. The appointments were Hillegas and George Clymer. The latter soon resigned to accept his seat as delegate to the congress. Hillegas discharged the duties of treasurer until September 1, 1789.

The Treasury department was organized under an act of September 2, 1789. Strictly speaking, it was reorganized, for the department, under various names, had been in existence since 1775. The Constitution went into effect March 4, 1789, Washington was inaugurated as the first President of the United States April 30, 1789. It will thus be seen that Hillegas was treasurer many months after the inauguration of Washington, and for nine days after the Treasury department was organized under the Constitution.

Festival of St. Peter

On the eve of St. Peter's day bonfires were commonly prepared and ignited throughout Great Britain. This festival was most fervently kept up at Eton during the Middle ages, where the boys made their bonfires against the church. In London the day was also associated with bonfires in the streets and with the setting of a Watch at night, the Watch parading with torches, and sometimes numbering fully 2,000 citizens. History records how King Hal, disguised in a guardsman's coat, went privately into Cheape to witness the pageant. Yorkshire fishermen remembered St. Peter on his day by holding festival, dressing their boats and painting their masts, and sprinkling the prows with good liquor for good luck.

Navajo Brave Flees From Mother-in-Law

The superstitions of the Navajos are so many and so varied that life for them would be a constant burden if they observed them as carefully as they are supposed to. It is probable that the great American mother-in-law myth, which represents all mothers-in-law as being very bad medicine, had its origin in the beliefs of the Navajos; for very terrible things are supposed to happen to any Navajo man who is so unfortunate as to meet his mother-in-law face to face, writes Kenneth L. Roberts, in the Saturday Evening Post.

When the Navajos are pressed to reveal the hideous calamities that would befall them in the event of meeting their mother-in-law, they move uneasily from foot to foot and evade the issue. It is horrible to talk about, but it is obvious that meeting a mother-in-law in Navajo circles is the very apex of tough luck.

A Navajo will go to any length to avoid burying a dead man. It is very bad medicine to kill or skin a bear. His superstition, however, has never led him to consider as bad medicine the stealing of fascinating little odds and ends from the white man any more than the white man in years gone by considered that he was doing any particular wrong when he sold Navajo women and children into slavery, stole Navajo land and killed Navajo sheep.

World Enriched by Genius in Poverty

Art? What have "idle riches" done for that? By rights they should have produced, they should have created, but so far as output goes their contribution has been disappointing. One often hears the suggestion made that young people of artistic promise should be "endowed" to create. "If only he had a little more money, and leisure—what great things he would do!" Would he? I believe, sordid as it may seem, that the wolf at the door has often been one of the most powerful incentives toward artistic creation.

Of course there are volcanic gifts like those of Shelley or Blake that erupt spontaneously and irresistibly, regardless of the consequences. But many of the greatest artists have been goaded on to creation by need. Shakespeare, Chatterton, and (coming a long way after these) Walter Scott, Doctor Johnson, Anthony Trollope. On the whole, great artists have been not only hard workers, but men who have had to work hard.—Violet Bonham-Carter in Good Housekeeping.

Mystery of Sound Board

The sound board of a piano, although it is actually a thin sheet of fir wood, is a wonder not fully understood in its effects. Most people know that every note has a complete and very elaborate set of vibrations which give it its pitch and character, and all these separate sets are reproduced in the sound board quite independently. Even in comparatively simple music there are frequently thousands of vibrations going on in that piece of thin brittle wood, which we can hear but cannot see; and with all the crossing and recrossing of the vibration lines which must take place there is never any confusion, and it is possible to select any group of vibrations as the one to which we can pay the most attention. Perhaps even still more wonderful is the fact that the piano maker can make the board susceptible to different kinds of vibration without knowing how he does it.

Rare Motorist

A Melbourne citizen was run down by a motor car the other day while perambulating homewards on a "push-bike." The car was on its wrong side, and the "bike" was broken across; its rider had a brace of ribs fractured and a damaged occiput, combined with cuts on the face and many abrasions. The tout for a firm of shypoo solicitors called upon the injured man and tried to persuade him to take action against the car owner for substantial damages. "Oh, I couldn't do that," said the hurt citizen. "But you can," peristed the tout, "and you would be absolutely sure to recover." "No, I cannot," pursued the victim. "You do not know the whole circumstances. The driver has apologized."—Sydney (Australia) Bulletin.

A Prayer

By Rev. Alan Pressley Wilson
(Copyright, 1924, WNU)

O LORD, we beseech Thee to grant that Jesus the Christ may dwell in our hearts through faith to the end that we, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and the height and depth of the love of Christ.

Come into our hearts and lives and dominate our wills as we enter another New Year and grant that we may live all through this year in accordance with Thy divine plan for our lives.

This we ask in the Name and for the sake of our Savior, Jesus Christ.

Amen.

A MILD WINTER PREDICTED

Algona Republican:— Fort Dodge weathr prophet says we are to have fine weather and an early spring. Down at Fort Dodge it seems that they have a weather prophet, who is ou do please his customers by giving the brand of weather they prefer. Ths long horn, Gene Dunnjng by name, says that we are to have a mild winter followed by an early spring. He based this upon the principle that when the moon leans toward the Scandinavian countries that good weather will follow. But, if the moon leans toward Ireland the weather will be the opposite. He says that the first three days of December predict the weather for the coming three months.

According to Mr. Dunning's belief the farmers of the state will be in their fields the latter part of February as they were in 1876. In that year, practically all the grajn was sowed in February and jn the last part of that month the roads were even dusty.

Mr. Dunning has predicted the weather for sveeral years, using as a basis the reports of each day's weather which he has kept for the past half century. Hjs reports have been sent to all parts of the nation and have been generally correct. Querjes pour into him every year from all parts of the country.

MANY IMPORTED CULLS

Dairy Cattle of Inferior Quality Bought by Iowa Farmers.

Iowa continues to buy dairy culls from other states. Although Iowa farmers paid $5,000,000 for 50,000 dairy cows imported from other states during 1922 and 1923 and a very large percentage of these proved to be culls, it is probable that an even larger number of imported cattle were purchased during the past year than either 1922 or 1923, according to John Shaw, dairy husbandry specialist, Iowa State College.

This practic of buying dairy cattle fram other states has not merely resulted in an expenditure of money for inferior cattle, but has been responsible for bringjng in many cattle infected wth tuberculosis, contagious abortion and other serious diseases. While jt must be admitted says Mr. Shaw, that some good cattle have obtained, yet the most of them have proved unsatisfactory and have been purchased at prices far in excess of their value.

One county agent in a recent letter told how a local man had shipped jn three carloads of dairy cattle from a near-by state and sold them to his neighbors. These cattle were described as 'mighty poor stuff' and he added that from three to five from each load later reacted to the T. B. test, altho they were represented as tested cattle when sold. A man in another sectjon of the state after jmporting a carload of cattle from a sister state, reported the developement of 10 cases of contajous abortjon, altho the disease had prevjously been unknown on his farm.

HONEY AS AN ANTI-FREEZE

No Danger from Freeing up Radiators if Prepared Properly

Honey as an anti-freeze solution for use in automobile radiators has attracted much attention, but little is known of its value as yet. Prof. Adolph Shane, specialist in trades and industries, Iowa State College, ran some tests last year and is now conducting furthur research along this line. He says that the honey mixture may be used with perfect safety, providing the solution is not weaker than half and half, honey and water, by volume. Professor Shane's present study is being made on the use of honey mixture in cars operated under ordinary condjtjons by their owners.

Altho the honey mixture will freeze at a few degrees below zero, no harm will be done to the cooling system, for when the honey mixture freezes jt takes on the consjstency of ice cream and is yielding in character. An advantage which honey has over alcohol is that when evapbratjon takes place with a honey mixture, the water passes off, leaving the honey mixture, wheres alcohol evaporates before water.

In very cold weather, the engine must be allowed to heat before starting out, because the honey mixture will not circulae untjl jt becomes warm. Also there appears to be a strong tendency to leak. especially around the pump packing boxes. It has been observed in one instance that repeated overheating of the engine caused candy-like deposjts in the radiator. However these were removed by washing with a hose.

The honey anti-freeze mixture is prepared by boiljng honey and water jn equal amounts by volumne, for a few minutes and then skimming off the resulting skum. The specific gravjty of such a mixture should be about 1.220. While Professor Shane is not ready to say that this solution will prove altogether satisfactory, he is convinced that no damage will result to the car by freezjng. The honey mixture should be drained off ed off immediately after danger by freezing is past in the sprjng because jt is the warm because it is possible that in warm weather the sugar in the honey may decompose to form acetjc acid which attacks the metal of the cooljng system.

On the Bridge at Midnight

By Marion R. Reagan

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

EVERY New Year's Eve the old lady came. Hoskins had been watching her now for several years. Always about the same time, eleven or twelve, she would come and take her stand in the middle of the bridge looking expectantly down the river. As the "Amalia," an old barge engaged in the Indian trade and scheduled to arrive annually in London on January 1, sailed up the river, she became violently agitated. When it passed directly under her, she shouted loudly in a cracked, hoarse voice, and tossed a purse down to a certain sailor on the deck who greeted her with wild cheers. She would watch the old boat glide easily up the river till it was out of sight. Then quietly she turned toward the south and walked away.

Now Hoskins was a conscientious thief. It was not his policy to rob old women of their purses. The opulent old men of Hyde Park, and the young men, too, were his game. But lately there were too many in the business for any profit. And the newspapers were against him, daily reminding their readers to beware of pickpockets. People watched one more now and one had to be on one's guard at all times.

Reluctantly Hoskins forsook the old field of his activities and sought other prey. It was a hard year, however. What little he picked up from the Christmas shoppers he already owed to friends. He was facing the New Year almost penniless. Then he remembered the old lady and her fat purse. He despised himself for thinking of it—he a man of principles—but starvation is starvation, and it was New Year's Eve. Tonight she would come.

He concealed himself in an old crevise in the masonry. It was a perfect hiding place. He could see out easily and not be seen by anyone.

About midnight he heard the slow, heavy step of the old lady. She passed close by him and advanced a few yards. He emerged from his hiding place and followed. About to make a quick spring at her, she turned, and faced him. He composed himself with difficulty, tipped his hat and bid her happy New Year in a weak, strained voice.

"Oh, thank 'ee, sir; the same to you, sir."

"Fine weather we been 'avin?"

"Fine, indeed. And fine for that boy o' mine what's comin' in tonight from them 'ot 'eathen places." The old lady sniffed. Hoskins edged a little closer to her.

"Ain't seen yer boy for some time?"

"Only from the bridge 'ere onct a year. Ain't seen him to 'old in my arms since he was a lad o' twelve. The hoarse old voice trembled a little—almost broke down. "An' 'ard life for a lad, that, on them ships, and no 'ome, and an 'arder life for me what's his lawful mother never to lay an arm on him in all these years." Here she broke into a heart-breaking sob. "It's a bad 'un I've been, sir. I couldn't let that lad o' mine see his mother was such a miserable old witch. It'd break his 'eart. I get together all I can in the world and give it to him onct a year for his 'oliday. It's the best I can do for 'im. Don't know who he thinks I am. He never troubled to find out. But—'Ey, 'ey, there," she shouted suddenly.

The "Amalia" was steaming up the river. It was directly under them now and a little youth in uniform jumped about eagerly on deck, signaling to the old woman on the bridge. She dropped the purse squarely into his hands.

"'Ooray for 'er Majesty," called the youth, his gay voice continuing to sound merrily as the barge disappeared up the river.

Finally the old woman turned to Hoskins. "Good night, sir, and God bless you in the New Year," she said softly, and walked away. Hoskins stood motionless, gazing up the river after the small hazy object that was the barge. There was a sentimental look in his eye, and a softness in the droop of his mouth. "God bless them," he breathed. "'Twould 'a been a bad way, that, to begin the New Year."

New Years Customs in Scotland

As in France, so in Scotland, New Years is the chief festival of the year. The eve of the day and the day itself are called "Daft Days," or crazy days. And the eve separated its "daft" associate is called "Hogmanay." But what this means one seems to know. The application of the term is in a custom of children to enrobe themselves in a sheet and go the rounds of houses on New Year's eve, knocking at the doors and crying "Hogmanay." In response they always get an oat cake.

Ho, Hum! Twelve Months Ahead

A New Year Victory

By Katherine Edelman

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

MR. NORMAN HOVOR wore a broad smile as he emerged from the Carter hospital early, blinding snow was falling and the morning was bitterly cold, but there was a warm glow around his heart that made him insensible for the moment to cold and chill.

Within his soul he felt the thrill of victory, a victory won over the greatest enemy the world knows. For, more his hand had helped to avert the sword of the grim reaper—his skill and sureness of touch had brought back another soul from the brink. It had been an emergency call this time, a call that came just as the bells were tolling the birth of the New Year, with the chances 100 to 1 against winning the fight, but again science and skill had added another victory to its long list. George Hamilton would live; his family in the little cottage in Bower street would have him back with them before many days and, instead of mourning and sadness, there would be joy and happiness in the little home. "Thank God that I was able to do it," Doctor Trevor whispered to the skies as he got into his little car. "It seems like an omen of good to have this happen just as the year was born."

For this time he knew that he had won a double victory. For many years he had tried hard to interest the old and wealthy Mrs. Whiteside in the building of a new hospital for Carter, to be operated along new and up-to-date lines. It was sorely needed in the town and it had been the dream of Doctor Trevor's life since he had come there. Several times he had thought that Mrs. Whiteside was on the point of consenting, but always at the last she had fallen back on the oft-used argument that people were just as well off and got along just as well or better before all these new fandangle ideas were known.

Then last night had come the call from the Hamilton home. For years the Hamilton family had been counted by Mrs. Whiteside as her own special protegees, and she had spoken her mind quite plainly to Doctor Trevor this time: "They say the case is almost hopeless—that there is not the equipment in the old hospital to handle such a case and that he cannot be moved to the city. Doctor Foster said there was a chance and you were the only one here that could take it. If you succeed, it means the new hospital within the year."

"And as Doctor Trevor drove to his home this early New Year morning, the big building, with all its modern equipment for helping humanity, loomed before him already—a dream building that would soon become a reality.

Appreciating your patronage of the past year and hoping that the pleasant relations now existing between us will continue, I wish you much happiness and prosperity for 1925, and assuring you that I appreciate your patronage and friendship.

WOMAN SO ILL WASHED DISHES SITTING DOWN

Mrs. Ashcroft's Remarkable Recovery After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Covington, Ky.—"I was so weak and nervous I could hardly do my housework as I could not stand because of the bearing-down pains in my back and abdomen. I sat down most of the time and did what I could do in that way—as washing dishes, etc. One day a book describing Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines was put in my mail-box. I saw how the Vegetable Compound had helped others so I gave it a trial. I had to take about a dozen bottles before I gained my strength but I certainly praise this medicine. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood medicine for poor blood. I was cold all the time. I would be so cold I could hardly sit still and in the palms of my hands there would be drops of sweat. I also used the Sanative Wash and I recommend it also. You may publish this letter and I will gladly answer letters from women and advise my neighbors about these medicines."—Mrs. HARRY ASHCROFT, 632 Beech Avenue, Covington, Kentucky.

"I—I—" Mrs. Archman's eyes widened and her lips quivered. "Oh! What shall I say?" she cried. "You don't know—you don't understand. I've got to tell you," she went on desperately. "Nellie isn't my own daughter, though I love her as if she were. She—she—Nellie! Hasn't your father told you anything?"

Nellie's lips were white. "My father?" she echoed. "Who is my father?"

"I can't tell you. Henry never told me. It wasn't his secret. But I suspect—I suspect—"

"I do, too." Nellie nodded slowly. "I've suspected for some time. Father said something. Mr. Dorth said more. And Captain Strindberg—but that's got nothing to do with Jim." She stretched out her hand to the young man. "We'll let it go for the present, but I'm going to marry Jim. Come on, I want to see the scene of the fight."

Van Kull shook his shoulders as if tossing off some heavy load. "Come along, then," he said. "But prepare yourself. I guess some of the mutineers are pretty badly wounded. The sight won't be a very pretty one."

Every one of the women caught her breath. "Oh! How wicked of me!" gasped Nellie. "I—I didn't realize that men were dying out there. We must try to help."

The debris of the fight was being rapidly cleared away. Half a dozen dead were laid out on the banks, but nearly all the prisoners, both those who were wounded and those who were not, had been put into the boats under guard, ready to be sent out to the destroyer.

Only Price remained on shore, watched by two sentinels. Clearly he was being reserved for some particular fate. But he met Nellie's eyes undauntedly as the party passed near him. "Well! You beat me," he gritted. "They're going to string me up out of hand, I reckon."

Nellie stepped back uncertainly. "I'm—I'm sorry," she said faintly.

"You ain't got any cause to be sorry," returned the man grimly. "I was going to do for you, all right, and for all the rest of your folks, too. And I'd ha' done it if it hadn't been for these Danes. D—n 'em! What on earth brings a Danish destroyer over here, anyway? I wish I could get some more of 'em before I croak." His eye followed Strindberg's form maliciously, as the latter passed to and fro directing the movements of his men.

"Say, lady," he went on. "I don't bear you no malice. I don't bear none of your crowd no malice. It's only those crazy Danes, butting in where they ain't got no business. I don't bear you no malice and I'll tell you something. That there woman's playing dirt on you." He gestured toward Miss Denslow. "I reckon she's the one that did that signaling. Anyway, she's disguised, and—"

For a moment the man glared at Miss Denslow; then his hand shot out and caught at her white hair. The guards caught at him, but they were too late. The hair came away, exposing beneath it a pile of closely bound chestnut locks that crowned a face that had suddenly become twenty years younger.

As Miss Denslow shrank back with a cry, drowned in a chorus of exclamations, Price burst out into a cackling laugh. "I thought so," he cried. "You're Edith Grant."

"No, she isn't." Young Archman sprang to the girl's side. "She's Edith Archman."

"Well, I'll be hanged!" The exclamation came from Van Kull, who was staring at the girl in amazement. "I thought you looked familiar, but I never saw you clearly since—"

Nellie broke in. "Yes! I remember!" she exclaimed. "You were at Miss Grant's cottage that night. You knew her—"

"Knew her? Of course, I knew her! She's my sister, Edith Van Kull. She wanted to be an actress, and father wouldn't have it and so she went ahead on her own. Well, I guess that's over now. Congratulate you, brother-in-law." He held out his hand to Harry Archman.

Lord George stepped forward. "May I also offer good wishes?" he asked. Then as Edith took his hand, he turned to the others. "I had the pleasure of seeing Miss Grant—er—Mrs. Archman—on the stage once," he said. "I recognized her on the El Rio and I didn't quite understand, don't you know."

Mrs. Archman had stood, bewildered for a moment, but as Edith turned toward her with trembling lips she suddenly reached out her arms. "There! There! Dear!" she cried. "It's all right. It doesn't matter who you are or what you are. You've been the dearest girl in the world to me on this trip. I'm glad that Harry has got you!"

"And I am, too!" Bess held out her hand. "But I hope you're not going to stop being my governess. Of course, we haven't really begun lessons yet, but—" She broke off with a shriek.

Captain Strindberg had come up behind Lord George. Just as he reached the party, Price, who was still waiting under guard a few feet away, snatched a pistol from the belt of one of his watchers and fired point-blank at Strindberg. "Now I've got you, you d—n butter-in!" he yelled.

As he pulled the trigger the other guard struck at him and the bullet went wild.

But it did not miss altogether. Lord George whirled half around and staggered back, clapping his hand to his left arm.

Before he could fall, Bess caught him. "He's killed! Oh! My G—d! He's killed," she shrieked. Her tones told a story all their own.

Lord George read it. Catlike he caught his footing. "Not a blooming bit of it, Bess," he said. "The beggar only got me through the arm. What?" For half a second he hesitated, then before them all, he kissed her squarely on the lips.

As he did so Archman ran up. "Hey! What's this?" he cried. "What's all this mean?"

Bess snatched at him. "Don't swear, pops!" she counseled innocently. "Save your cuss words. You've got worse shocks than this coming." She glanced at Edith and then at Nellie. "However, we won't talk about that now. Just shake hands with Lord George and—"

But Strindberg broke in. While the others talked, he had been acting. Crimson with rage he had sprung toward the guards, who, too late, had fallen upon Price like thunderbolts. "Fools! Dolts! Blockheads!" he cried. Then he spun round on his lieutenant, who came running up. "Take that man out of sight and hang him to the nearest tree!" he ordered.

The lieutenant saluted, gave a brisk order, and the men closed in around Price and marched him away up the slope of the ravine. Then the captain broke in on Bess' words. "Mr. Archman," he ordered sharply, "be good enough to lead me to his highness!"

For perhaps ten minutes Archman's boat, with its lantern gleaming at the bow, pushed on through the darkness, following the convolutions of the stream. At last a gleam of daylight appeared ahead, evidently shining in through some opening in the rocks. Close to it Archman's boat stopped and its pasengers clambered out.

"This is as far as the boats can go at this stage of the tide, captain," he explained, as the latter's boat came up. "At high tide we can row through, but at present the channel beyond the opening is practically dry and we have to walk. If you will follow—"

Strindberg bowed. "Lead on," he said.

The distance to be traversed was not great, and luckily so, for to unaccustomed adventurers the surroundings were terrifying. Geyserlike bursts of steam puffed up again and again in their faces; the crust on which they walked was hot to their feet, and almost continual tremors ran through the earth. When at last they pushed through the final curtain of mist and came out close to a house, there was not one of the party but drew a long breath of relief, even though they all knew that the crater had long been occupied by men and must be perfectly safe.

In front of the building Archman halted. "Friends all," he said. "Captain Strindberg! The time has come to lift a curtain that fell more than twenty years ago, when one whose name I will not mention, even now, quit his great place in the world to marry the woman of his choice. He sailed away with her to conceal himself so that he might live in democratic freedom from the restrictions that hedge about a court. Here he came and here he has lived since, and here his wife is buried.

"He did not live idly. He had already won a reputation for chemical research, and here he broadened and expanded his knowledge. He called to his aid the heat and gases that alone survived of the mighty forces that once filled this place. Many inventions he made and marketed through me, his servant. Many secrets of nature he discovered, among others the secret of the diamond. He harnessed the volcano and bent it to his will.

"One lot of diamonds he made and sent to me by the hands of his servant, Morbach. Most of you know how Morbach was robbed and murdered. I do not know whether the criminal has been discovered—"

"Not the murderer, father." It was Nellie who interrupted. "But the man, Henry Harrison, who picked Mr. Morbach up after the auto accident, has confesed that he came back to Miss Grant's cottage in disguise and got the map and the diamonds from Mr. Morbach. Later he shipped on board the El Rio under the name of Price and led the mutiny."

"Humph! That explains much! I will say here that his highness has made no more diamonds and will make no more. The secret is lost. And now perhaps Captain Strindberg will explain why he seeks his highness—why he has sought him so desperately that he or his friends corrupted my secretary and bribed him to play traitor—"

"Akin?" The exclamation came from all.

"Yes! Akin was the traitor. I suspected him before I left New York, but I thought that once I had gotten away he would be harmless. But Captain Bunker and I are now satisfied that it was he who signaled to the pursuing ship and"—Archman broke off—"I will ask Captain Strindberg to remove him from the El Rio. He turned to the officer. "Captain," he finished, "perhaps you will explain."

The captain shrugged his shoulders. "His highness is needed in Denmark," he said. "Our secret service knew he would be needed sooner or later, and when he disappeared we tried to find him. Little by little we picked up the trail. We learned of Archman and of Morbach and of the existence of children." His eyes wandered to Nellie. "And now we have found him. In the search we have had to do things that we regret; but one cannot be squeamish when kingdoms—even small ones—are at stake. Success excuses all!" He shrugged his shoulders. "Enough!" he snapped. "Lead me to his highness."

Archman bowed. "Come!" he said, and turned toward the house.

Side by side the two mounted the stairs and entered the door. Behind them came the rest of the civilians. The sailors, under the command of the lieutenant, remained outside.

Archman threw open the door of the room to the right of the hall and ushered in his companions. He took off his hat as he entered; and the others, after a gasp of comprehension, did likewise.

In the middle of the room, on two trestles, surrounded by flaring tapers, rested a coffin draped in black, whose open glass front revealed the figure of a huge man whose waxen features bore, even in death, an unfaceable air of majesty and mastery. Archman looked at him reverently. "This is his highness," he said.

The officer blinked. "I recognize him," he said, after an instant. "He is not very greatly changed since I knew him."

"I, too!" Lord George stepped forward. "I knew his highness years ago. That was why I was selected by my government to follow a clew associated with Mr. Archman and try to find him. I recognize him. He was a real statesman—one who gave promise of being a powerful figure in Europe, captain. Naturally my government, like many others, was interested in his strange disappearance. There have been rumors of a great war, you know."

Strindberg bowed. "I thank you, Lord Caruthers," he said. "His highness' death will be a great blow to Denmark. And his sons and daughters? What of them?" he looked at Archman.

"He leaves no sons!" Archman spoke deliberately.

"Perhaps it is as well. The marriage of his highness was morganatic and a son might complicate matters. But a daughter would be different." The captain's eyes wandered to Nellie, who stood hand in hand with Van Kull. "His majesty instructs me to say that his feelings toward any daughter are of the kindest. He offers her a title, great wealth, and a noble husband—everything that the customs of our country permit." The captain turned to Archman. "You can, of course, furnish proofs as to her identity?" he questioned.

"Yes!" Archman rose from a safe into which he had been delving and came forward. In his hands he held a sheaf of folded papers. "Yes!" he repeated. "The proofs are all here and are in due order. His highness meant to give them to his daughter yesterday. Unfortunately he decided to wait till today, hoping to be stronger. But last evening he died. I was with him when I received the news of the arrival of the El Rio. That was why I delayed. But the proofs are indubitable. I hand them to her who is more concerned."

With a sudden gesture he placed the papers in Nellie's hands. "Take them, my dear!" he said, his voice breaking.

Van Kull dropped the girl's hand and stepped back. His face was very white.

Nellie glanced at him. Then her eyes circled the room, and she shrank back slightly as she met the eyes centered upon her. Then with a quick indrawing of breath she spoke.

"Captain Strindberg," she said clearly, "let me understand. Would the daughter of his highness have to give up her Americanism, her home, her lover, her all?"

The captain bowed. "Madame," he said, "it would be almost impossible for her to avoid doing so."

Nellie nodded. "And in return she would get—what? An introduction to a court of strangers, a sum of money, a husband picked out for her by someone else? I'm sorry, but the price is too high!" With a sudden movement she thrust the papers into the flame of one of the tall tapers that burned at the dead man's head.

As they flamed up Strindberg made a sudden movement to snatch them. Then, as abruptly, he desisted and stood still while the papers burned.

With fitting ceremony, they buried the dead statesman that afternoon.

In the evening, when they were all gathered together, Nellie again addressed the Danish officer.

"I understand how seriously you, who love your country, Captain Strindberg, take this matter. I have a natural affection for your country—the country of my poor dead father. But—can't you see? Your proofs and summons come a generation too late! I'm an American — a Yank clear through and proud of it. And so is Henry Archman, though he loved and respected his old friend, my father."

"Surest thing you know!" roared Archman. "You're all right, Strindberg, but the girl's her own boss! Captain Bunker, we sail for New York tomorrow morning!"

Cross-Word Fad Found Helpful in Insomnia

One of the leaders in the medical profession of Philadelphia is accustomed to prescribing the ubiquitous cross-word puzzle as a potent remedy for insomnia.

He and his wife are devotees of the pastime and he finds it a leverage that lifts his mind from professional cares, according to the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"In the treatment of insomnia," he observes, "the element of physical relaxation is, of course, all-important. The patient should accustom himself to the pleasing delusion that it doesn't make any difference whether he sleeps or not. Why worry?"

One doctor, who says he can't be thinking about operations all the time, finds chess his soothing avocation. Others sedulously attend football games. It is strange how many fans the game has among physicians.

Red Indian Chosen as Canadian Solon

Ludger Bastein, a member of the Huron tribe and the first Indian to be elected to the Quebec legislature, won the by-election for the conservatives in Quebec county by defeating the Liberal candidate, E. Bedard, whose party has been 27 years in power in the ancient capital, says the Christian Science Monitor.

Mr. Bastein's father was head chief of all the Hurons of Canada for a term of office. He himself is a man of wealth. He operates a large tannery business at Lorette, a well-known Indian settlement. Some years ago when the city of Quebec interfered with the water supply of his tanneries he carried a legal action for damages to the privy council and won an award of $300,000. He is a director of numerous enterprises.

Miles in Other Lands

Miles are not all of the same length. They vary in different lands. Thus, the Spanish, Polish and Dutch miles are three and a half times as long as the English mile, and the German mile is four times as long. They even seem to vary sometimes in one's own country, the last mile of a day's tramp being considerably longer than the first!

The Thinking Reed

Man is but a reed, the weakest in nature; but he is a reed which thinks. The universe need not rise in arms to crush him; a vapor, a drop of water, suffices to kill him. But were the universe to crush him, man would still be greater than the power which killed him; for he knows that he dies, and of the advantage which the universe has over him, the universe knows nothing. —Pascal.

FACTS ABOUT THE 1924 INCOME TAX LAW

INCOME TAX TIME IS HERE AGAIN

Payment Period is Now Open and Continues until March 15th.

Exemptions

For each single person an exemption of $1000.

For a married person, living with husband or wife, or the head of a family, a personal exemption of $2,500, regardless of net income.

For each person (other than husband or wife) whether related to the taxpayer or not and whether living with him or no, but who s dependent upon him for his chief support from the said taxpayers, an exemption of $400, providing the dependent is under 18 or incapable of self-support. because defective.

Credit this year is based upon actual financial dependency and not upon legal dependency. It may accrue to a taxpayer who is not the head of a family. But a father whose children receive half or more of their support from a trust fund or other separate source is not entitled to this credit.

The Rate

After deductions for legitimate operating expenses and interest, taxes, depreciation and business losses of a certain character, the taxpayer is required to pay normal tax of 2 per cent on all of hs net income not exceeding $4000—a normal tax of 4 percent on his net income in excess of $4000 and not in excess of $8,000— and a normal tax of 6 percent on all his income in excess of$8000 regardless of the amount.

The advent of the new year brings in addition to many other things, the problem of the income tax. The period for filing of income tax returns opened January 1 and coses March 15,, 1925.

The fgures given above wi give the tax payer a brief iea of the majn points in figuring income tax for1924

Cartoonists and jokesters would have it that the income ax is a terrible thing, falling slightly short of a national calamity. As a matter of fact the ncome tax probem is simple and requires but few fundamentals firmly fixed in them jnd of the taxpayer to elimjnate all worry.

Provjsions in regar to the income tax queston have been grealy altered by the act of 1924. The real terms of this act will perhaps be more clearly understood by the comparison of its rates with those of the act of 1921. which was the las previous reveneue act.

"The normal tax" s a tax on that part of the jncome of each individual after all deductions have been clamed from the gross estate and also fter the persona exempton has been taen. Income received from dividends on corporaton tax js not subject to the normal tax, but is subject to the surax which will be referred to below.

Under the 1921 act the taxpayer, after kdeducting for his business expenses—such as legitimate operating expenses, interest, taxes, depreciation and busjness losses of a certan character, was required to pay a normal tax of 4 per cent on all of his net jncome not exceeding $4000 and the normal tax on all of his income in excess of $4000 was 8 percent regardless of the size of the income. The rate of the income nev er exceeded 8 per cent on incomes of any size.

Under the 1924 act the taxpayer after making similiar deductions, js required to pay a normal tax of 2 per cent on all of his net income not exceeding $4000—a normal tax of 4 per cent on his net jncome jn excess of $4000 but not in excess of $8000—and a normal tax of 6percent on all his income jn excess of $8000. regardless of what the amount may be.

Unljke the act of 1921, the act of 1924 provides that "non-resident aljens," who are residents of Canada or Mexico, shall be ljable for normal tax on income for 'compensation for services rendered jn the Unjted States," at the same rates provided for ciiizens of the Unite States. The rae for non-residen aiens who are residents of other foregn countrjes is 6 per cent normal tax on their net incomes.

In the 1921 act the surtax, which is a tax on all the net income of the taxpayer includjng mony received, from divdends on corporaton stock and febore he has taken credit for personal or famjly exemption to which he is entitled under the normal tax. became effective when the income was $5000. Under the act of 1924 the jncome must equal $10 000 before the surtax becomes effective. The difference brought about by the changes jn the surtax will be illustrated by the following example: formerly the total surtax on a $20,000 income amounted to $710.00 while under the 1924 act the surtax amounts to onlly $210.

Comparison of the following table of exemption, which was in effect un der the 1921 act, with the 1924 table given above wil show severa important changes:

For each single person an exemption of $1000.

For a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exempton of $2,500 providjng the net jncome did not exceed $5000, in which case only $200 exemption was allowed.

For each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer. jf such dependent were under 18 years of age or ncapable of self-support because defective, a personal exemption of $400 was allowed.

MEMOIR

William Gilbert Elder

William Gilbert Elder was born at Blairsville, Penn. March 11, 1861. He was the second child of George W and Margaret C. Elder. When at the age of three years, his parents moved to a farm near Goodell, Iowa at which place, under the enviements congenial to a Pioneer lift. William grew to manhood, developing jn every way those sturdy characteristics that made of him the manly man that he was.

After the death of his mother in 1908, he moved to Oklahoma City, where he lived until the time of his death.

William was modest and retiring in his dispositjon, and did not make friends very quicky, but during hjs life he made many friends to whom he was very dear.

William was an honest. trustworth y man. He was possesed of a Christ ion character, tolerent toward all. Thus and Thus, the boy was born.

Thus the boy grew into manhood, thus the man lived and filled his place in the world until December 28, 1924 when at hjs home in Oklahoma City, William left the clay house, in which he lved for 63 years, 9 months and 17 days, vacant.

The windows were closed and the old clay house was made dark and dreary by the last enemy, death. He leaves to mourn him in this material world, five brothers and three sisters. Two brothers and two sisters have preceeded him in death.

Having finjshed his race with life, he at last has reached his goal. Whe ther or not it js a goal ofGlorified achievements we do not know. One thing we d! know, God is just, God is good, and God is true.

May we ljve and be and do, that our final reach will be that heavenly home on high.

ECONOMICAL HOUSE HEATING

Severe Weather Makes Furnace Firing an Art.

Because of the severe winter weather which has been prevelentin Iowa during recent weeks, the business of house heating has assumed a new importance in the eye of the Iowa householder. The engineering experiment station at Iowa State College has given out a few hints which may help toward efficent and economical house heating.

Loose fitting windows and doors should be repaired.

The furnace or stove should be fired at regular jntervals.

A furnace fjre should burn evenly over the entire grate and should be kept free from bright spots, while the fuel bed should be ept free from clinkers.

To prevent loss of fuel, excessive shaking of grates should be avoided. Ashes should not be allowed to accumulate in the ash pit, since this interfere with the draf and may resul in warping or burning out a grate.

The fire pot should be kept well filled with fuel jn cold weather. In mild weather a layer of ashes on the grate below thef uel bed prevents too rapid burning.

Humified air makes jt possible to keep a lower temperature in the house which is just as comfortable and more healthful. besides being less jnjurious to the furniture.

Registers, radiators and heating surfaces are more efficient when kept clean and free from dust, dirt ashes and soot.

Care should be taken in using fjne coal not to lose too much fuel by sifting through the grates.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR JEANETTE SMID TO BE HELD SATURDAY

Miss Jeanette, twenty year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. U. G. Smid passed away at the home of her parents, near Klemme, Wednesday mornjng, January 7th. At this time the funeral services have been arranged for Saturday afternoon and will be held at the home at one o' clock p. m. and at the church at two o'clock P. M.

At this writing the obituary is not available, but will be published next week. The Smid family have the sympathy of the entire community in the loss and seemingly untimely leath of their daughter and sister.

HOW MANY COLORS CAN YOU SEE IN A RAINBOW?

Commonly Stated there are Seven—Few see More than Five

Investigations intended to help measure variations jn the intensity of day-light under differing condjtions have been part of the work of the Weather Bureau of the United Staes Department of Agriculure. Other sudies of light as influenced by the atmosphere have been carried on from time to time. A question along this line sometjmes asked Weather Bureau metrologists is how many colors can be seen in ther ainbow.

Theoretically, the rainbow contains all of the seven so called primary coors jnto which the spectrum was somewhat arbitrariy divided by Sir Issaac Newton. Actually, however, few people can distinguish more than four, or at most, five colors in the rainbow. This is due in the first place to the fact that there is always a considerble amount of over lapng of the primary colors, as the light does not come from a single point, but from various parts of the sun's disk, which has an angular diameter of about half a degree. In the second place, few people nowadays think f indigo as a color distinct from blue. and orange isals o likey ingnored as a separate coor. The number of colors visjble and the relative amounts of space they occup y in the bow vary consjderabley with the size f the randrops in which the bow is produced. Rainbows caused by the moon generaly showi little or no color, on account of the faintness of the light. Bright lunar rainbows are, however, quite distinct ly colored.

USES HANDKERCHIEF GAS SOAKED TO START HIS CAR

The Capital's suggestion that motorsts who have discovered successful ways to start motor cars in cold weather bore fruje a day oga when Abrahamson. for many years a gasoline engine salesman, walked into the Capital office with receipe which he "guarantees to start any kind of a gasoline engine almost the first urn of the wheel, no matter how cold it.

Them ethod requires no costly contraptions. The "ool" is just a piece of cheesecloth, or a clean handkerchief.

"You take a cheesecloth or handkerchief," Ahbrahamson said "and hold it in the gasoline tank until it has become saturated with fuel Then grasp i tightly jn your hand for a few minutes—three or four minutes in enough.

"That warms the gasoline enough for it to volitalize. The next step is o place the saturated handkerchief over the intake manifild of the carburetor and turn the motor over. It will start immedately.

"I have starter tractor motors jn this way after hey had been cranked unsuccessfully for half a day, out in the field when jt was thirty below zero. Thes cheme never has failed me yet.

In some automobiles the intake manfold of the carbureter is covered but usually it will be only the work of a minute to disconnetc ths covering temporarily.' —Des Moines Capital.

Community Building

Twelve Good Reasons for Owning One's Home

Here are a round dozen reasons why the "Own Your Home" movement is worth while for every man to join eventually. "Why not now?"—to use a well-known advertising slogan. The reasons follow:

A home is the best investment you can make, and it will yield the biggest returns on your money.

It creates a feeling of assurance and independence.

It is a big step toward future happiness and success.

You need not wait until you have the full amount in order to begin purchasing your home.

By making monthly payments you pay for your home with the same amount of money, sometimes less than you are now paying for rent.

Each month your equity in the property becomes greater.

When you are living in your home you are not living in an atmosphere of uncertainty.

You will be secure in the thought, "I will not be forced to move from the neighborhood in which I have lived for many years."

You can continue to worship in the same church, your children can continue at the same school and you can continue the association and friendship of your neighbors.

You do not have to importune the landlord, who is deaf to your urgent plea to fix the roof, the furnace or the porch.

When you own your home you add prestige to your standing in the community and among your business associates.

To own a home is a duty you owe your wife and children—almost as important as life insurance.

"Consider this dozen daily," paraphrased another "ad" man.

Would Take Billboards From Public Highways

The National Association of Real Estate Boards has issued a statement expressing approval of a law just becoming effective in Iowa, which prohibits billboards on public highways.

The new Iowa law was enacted primarily as a measure of public safety. A confusion of advertising signs along the way obscures the official signs placed to warn of turns, sharp curves, railroad crossings and the like. But it is no less valuable as a measure for conserving scenic spots for the enjoyment of the general public, the association points out in its statement.

The view from the highway does not belong to the individual who owns the property along the right of way. It is a community possession. Realtors are interested in the whole present movement to eliminate billboards from highways where they are a blot on scenery, a priceless public possession.

Modern Principles

A grocer in a western town has an arrangement with the pastors of the various churches whereby he "swaps" with them the names of new families moving into town.

The merchant and the ministers jot the names down in little notebooks and compare every two weeks.

This is one of the plans used to get the names of newcomers.

They also watch the papers and keep in touch with real estate men. As soon as they learn of a new family in town they call personally.

Finding the right place to attend church or trade is always a job for a woman who has just moved. So she is usually glad to give an order to the one who takes the trouble to call on her. And by starting on a friendly basis they generally succeed in getting her trade and holding it.—The Progressive Grocer.

City's Need of Trees

Beautification of Illinois cities through city control of all trees along the streets, for which there are laws on the statute books, is being brought to the attention of various cities by P. L. Phelps of Rochelle, Ill., scientific forester, supported by the Illinois Municipal league.

"Providing shade," Mr. Phelps says, "should be as much a municipal function as providing lights or sidewalks. To obtain satisfactory results it is necessary that the city own and control all street trees.

"Nothing adds more to the beauty of a city than its well-ordered trees. This fact long has been recognized, and for many years householders have been planting trees adjoining their property in an effort to beautify that part of the city in which they live."

Change in City Managers

City managers are not invariably regarded by the cities themselves as precious possessions, a correspondent of the London Times in America writes to that journal. Forty per cent of 219 managers have been allowed to serve for less than two years. One city in Oregon has had ten managers in nine years, and Columbus, Ga., had three in one year. Nevertheless, for all its drawbacks, in theory and practice, the city manager plan seems to be making steady headway.

CHILDREN'S SPRING FROCKS; SIMPLICITY MARKS FOOTWEAR

FOR little tots and for girls of the intermediate ages—from seven to fourteen—stylists who specialize in designing their frocks have already presented many spring models. These include practical day dresses, and also party frocks, all in gay colors and made of various materials. These materials are already in the hands of merchants, so that the spring outfitting of little folks may be undertaken at once and be out of the way by the time Mr. Robin announces the coming of warm days meant for outdooring.

Pretty Linen Frock.

The main style points, accented by the new arrivals, may be summed up briefly as colorful materials, round neck lines, straight silhouette, low waistline, indicated by girdles of ribbon, self material or leather belts (according to the character of the frock), and novel decorations. All these are features of importance in frocks for girls from seven to fourteen. In materials, linens, cottons, rayon materials striped and plain; also pongee in plain and striped patterns, and crepe de chine, plain, striped and figured, with wool challies, account for a great many of the new dresses. Pipings and tiny buttons in bright contrasting colors add vivacity to the plain materials when they are not themselves high-colored.

For the scrawny little girl, inverted plaits, introduced at each side, so that they are not noticeable, the raglan or kimono sleeve, tucks and other expedients are employed, to furnish grace of line. Needlework is, as always, an important decorative feature on children's clothes, and it appears in simple, sketchy designs. It is this simple stitchery that adorns the pretty linen frock pictured, which one can imagine in any of the bright shades of blue, green, red or yellow that are displayed, and stitched with white or a contrasting color. Red is very well represented in the new collection and much is made of natural pongee, piped with red and finished off with tiny red buttons. The coarser rayon materials are liked for tailored frocks and striped crepe de chine for the better wash dresses.

Women, and particularly American women, have grown very fastidious about their footwear—they demand more in the way of decorative value in their shoes and hose than ever before—at least in modern times. Some of the ancients clothed their feet magnificently—which ought to put us moderns above reproach—even when facetious male relations accuse us of wearing millinery on our feet.

But there has been a reaction, away from the more fanciful styles in footwear for daytime, toward simple lines. This is in keeping with the vogue for simplicity in garments. Fashionable shoes for daytime wear are generally made of kid, in brown or black, and are plainer finish than those of last season. For afternoon nothing is more elegant than brown kid with long vamp and high heel having for ornament only a plaited leather fastening. But the ensemble costume is perfected by shoes to match in color, as gray, beige, tan, brown or black shoes and stockings, with frocks in these colors. A pretty pair of gray kid shoes for afternoon wear is shown at the left of the group pictured here. It reveals the approved high arch, the graceful heel and toe treatment in fashionable footwear of this character.

For street wear the bow tie has reappeared on brown and black kid shoes. A serviceable slipper appears in the picture with a flat bow of grosgrain ribbon for ornament. It has a medium length vamp and semi-high heel and is very soft and comfortable It is in kid shoes that we may achieve stylish as well as comfortable footwear. A substantial kid shoe is shown also with two-strap fastening and medium low heel—nothing is better for service than this model with its trim lines and graceful shaping. Ornaments for varying daytime models are usually made of kid, in square, circular or oval shapes of either plain or plaited leather.

Some Styles in Footwear.

Evening shoes are quite another story. Here we may be truthfully accused of emulating the ancients, since there is a fad for jeweled heels, brilliant ornaments and rich materials. White kid opera pumps are shown with a band of tiny rhinestones defining all edges. Others display rhinestone buckles edged with ostrich to match the evening gown in color.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON SAVING AND INVESTING

Aunt Emmy and Maud were talking about saving money.

"What does a savings bank do with the money people put in it, Aunt Emmy?" inquired Maud.

"It is invested in sound mortgages, perhaps, or government and corporation securities. You see, the men who run savings banks are trained financiers. They know what securities are good and what are questionable, so they invest the bank's funds—that is, the money they receive from their depositors—in the best securities in such a way that they will be able to pay you interest on your deposits and be able to return your money to you when you want it. In order to do that they must invest in securities that pay a higher rate of interest than they give you to cover the bank expenses and set aside a surplus against emergencies."

"But, Aunty, if the banks invest our money, why can't we invest it ourselves?"

"We could if we knew as much about investments as the bank does. Bankers are not likely to make the mistakes made by the ordinary person. They are not deceived by impressive looking stock certificates, plausible letters from brokers or charming voices over the telephone urging them to buy this or that. Your banker is a hard-headed business man who investigates thoroughly before he invests the bank's money. For this reason many conservative persons prefer to keep their savings in a savings bank, knowing that their money is in wise hands and that even though the rate of interest they get may be moderate their money is far safer than it would be if it were invested less skillfully."

"Surely, though, it must be possible to get more than 4 per cent on your money and yet be safe," Maud said.

"It is under certain conditions," Aunt Emmy agreed. "The trouble is that so few people are frank about their money matters with men who really can be trusted for advice. They would rather take the advice of a glib stock salesman. No matter how small a sum a person is thinking of investing, advice should be sought from a trust company or bank. Women especially don't seem to realize this.

"The savings bank is always safe. It is a good plan to keep putting money in the savings bank until you have a good sum. Then withdraw part and invest it in some security paying a higher rate of interest. But be sure to seek good advice before you buy. In this way you can always have some cash on hand in the bank, yet gradually convert most of your savings into high grade securities."—ANNE B. AYMES.

THE BURDEN OF GOVERNMENT

The financial burden of government has become increasingly heavy in recent years. It has, at times, reached the point of oppression. The Federal tax of 1920 aggregated more than five and one-half billion dollars. This year, after strenuous efforts to reduce the war-time peak, the total still exceeds three billion dollars—a sum far greater than the entire burden of funded debt accumulated as a result of the Civil War. State and local taxes have increased at an even greater rate. Taxation has become more than a problem; it is a threat of impending disaster.

Nor is the burden of government limited to taxation. We are oppressed by a multiplicity of restrictive laws and administrative regulations. It is estimated that there are over two million laws and ordinances in the records of nation, states and municipalities. One adult person out of every twenty engaged in business or industry is a government official, agent or employee.

In the face of this record, despite the general recognition of the overwhelming burden of government, we find ourselves constantly waging a defensive battle against plans and programs which would transfer still greater duties to government, which would hamper individual initiative still further, which will—if put into practice—crush individual ambition and destroy individual opportunity.

Under these circumstances it is our right—it is our duty—to affirm and defend sound principles of political faith as we have, on other occasions, supported sound principles of economic progress. The Constitution of the United States has stood, for 135 years as the bulwark of our individual and our collective liberties. The Constitution has been and is now the greatest existing restraint upon an arrogant majority. It has been and is now the greatest existing defence of the very minorities which, at this time, are being led to denounce its restrictions.

One of our greatest needs is to repel the attacks now being made upon the integrity of this charter of our freedom. We should—we must—oppose vigorously all efforts to give Congress the power to override decisions of the Supreme Court—and thereby destroy the division of governmental power which is the inherent strength of our constitutional system.—Walter W. Head, American Bankers Association.

WOMAN'S COURAGE FOILS BANDITS

Grapples With Armed Robbers Who Attempt to Hold Up Her Bank.

UNARMED, WINS LONG FIGHT

One Bandit Killed and Other Wounded When Men Come to Rescue—Story Told at National Meeting of Bankers.

When the wave of crime against banks, which has reached unprecedented proportions, was under discussion at the recent meeting of the American Bankers Association at Chicago, and defense measures were up for consideration, the bankers were told how one resolute woman defended herself against two armed desperadoes in her little Western bank. The woman was Mrs. Mary Garlinghouse, cashier of the State Bank of Vera, Oklahoma, which she conducts singlehanded. Her own story, as she told it in a report to the protective authorities of the Association, follows:

"While I was posting my ledger, with my back to the door, I heard a commotion. When I turned around there were two men back of the counter, with handkerchiefs over their faces. The larger made a jump for my gun, before I realized what was happening. The robbers each had a gun pointed at me, and one said, 'Lay down or I will shoot you!' I said, 'I will not lay down and you will not shoot me.' This conversation was repeated several times. I told them to cut out their foolishness.

"A man who was in the corridor when the bandits came laid down on the floor, face down. I tried to argue with the robbers and they began to get rough, but something within me seemed to realize that they were getting confused. I kept thinking that some one would come in or see us.

"The larger man got busy with the money, while the smaller one took care of me. He jerked me to my knees and hit me over the head. This jolted my glasses and I lifted my hand, waving it in front of his face and telling him to wait a minute. I took my glasses off and put them on the table. Lifting my hand caused this man to look up and he saw we were observed from across the street. Then he saw Constable Mosby, with his gun, and said to the man who was gathering the money, 'Don, we are seen, we must make our getaway!' He then grabbed me rather roughly and said: 'Come on here! You are coming along!'

Struggles With Robber

"Here is where our struggle began. All the time we fought over his gun, I did not try to take it away from him, but kept moving it from one side to the other, and of course he was determined to point it straight at me. I told him, 'I will not go and I am not afraid of you. You will not shoot me!'

"We fought to the back door of the bank. When we got there, he raised his arm to fire at Mosby. I grabbed him around the neck, and he fired before I could get his hand. I am positive that this man was never hugged so tightly, nor ever will be, as I hugged him, realizing that I must fight for my life. The man tried his level best to kill me. What the other man was doing I do not know. My man was trying to pull me out the back door to their car, which was still running. I was determined he should not.

"R. C. Lapsley, the mayor, or Ed. Mosby shot the man in the arm. There was a jerk and out the door we went. Things were coming my way now. I pulled the robber into the weeds, half on his back and half on his left side.

"The robber finally said, 'I will give up.' I said, 'Give me your gun.' He answered, 'I will not; I know you will shoot me.' So the struggle kept on. We got back on our feet. I meant to have his gun and would fight him until I got it. We fought through the back room behind the counter. He begged me not to take him, and I asked him again for his gun and he said, 'No, I know you will shoot me.' We struggled through the front door and then Constable Mosby said, 'Drop your gun or I will shoot you.' The bandit gave up and the men took charge of him.

One Bandit Killed

"I wondered about the other bandit and started to look for him and found him in the closet in the back of the bank dying. R. C. Lapsley told me afterwards that when the bandit and I lurched through the back door the larger man, with his gun in his right hand and the sack of money in his left, stepped up to the door. They both fired at once. The robber dropped his gun and the money, but they could not see what became of him.

"If all towns had as brave men as we have here, bank robbing would be a thing of the past. You can understand the remarkable marksmanship that was displayed, when I tell you that in our struggle at the back of the bank the men took several shots at the robber, but were very careful not to hit me. The robber got a shot in his right arm and a glancing shot in his left.

"All during the shooting and fighting, I felt confident I would get the best of my man. I felt that the man would not shoot me and like all Western women did not lose my nerve. Bank robbers, as a rule, are cowards and if one shows that he is not afraid of them they will lose their nerve."

HANDLING PREGNANT EWES

Balanced Ration Should Feed Well But not Fatten

Success in carrying the pregnant ewe thru the winter to lambing time depends on proper feed and care. The ewe should have a well-balanced ration, which will keep her gaining in weight without becoming fat. The best feeds for ths purpose, according to P. S. Shearer, sheep specialist, Iowa State College, are clover or alfalfa hay, corn silage and a little oats and corn if needde. Corn fodder, straw and other cheap roughages can be used to cheapen the ration, but will not do alone.

Give ewes the run of the fields whenever weather permits and see that they take exercse daily even when the weather is bad. Scattering the rough feeds over the lot or pasture is a good way to induce exercise. Salt and fresh clean water, preferbly with the chill taken off, should be supplied regularly.

In bad weather, sheep should have shelter where they can keep their coats and feet dry. They can endure much cold if they do not get wet. Keep the feed cost down by using the fields and home grown feeds. Expnsiye protein supplements, mixed feeds and so called tonics are not needed if the above suggestions are observed.

THE WAY OF ENTERING

Some old time publisher prepared the following on "How to enter a newspaper office."

"Advance to the inner door and give three distinct raps—or kick the door down. The "devil" will attend you to the alarm. You will give him your name, postoffice adress and the number of years you are in the hole for the paper. He will admit you. You will advance to the east; where you will find the editor fiddling with the typewriter. Addrss the editor with the following countersign:

Exend the right hand about two feet from the body, thumb and index fnger clasping a ten dollar bill which drops into the extended hand of the editor, at the same time saying: 'Were you looking for me' The editor will grasp your hand and the bill, and respond, 'You bet!'

"After giving him all the news concerning your neighborhood, you will be permitted to retire with a receipt for an obligation properly discharged."

BOOST!

Tell us not in mournful numbers that this town's on the bum, rouse up from your peaceful slumbers; get out and make things hum. If we go to work in earnest, we can make things hit on high: "dust thou are to dust returnest' is a song of by and buy. All he past is done forever—you can't call one moment back—and the future may come never, this is true, so help me Mack. Now's the time to do your boosting, do not wait tomrrows' dawn, in the grave you may be roosting. all your boosting chances gone. Lay aside your little hammer, grab a horn and toot a few; squelch the kicker's dadblamel hammer with a joyful toot or two. This old town is sure a pippin', and we ought to boost it big, when we hear some growler yippin' we should smite him on the wig. Mighty oaks that grow and flourish came from acrons plain and small; with your boosting you may nourish something that may help us all; something that may prove a blessing to the toiling sons of men—that's the point that I am stressing—boost and boost then boost again. People love the smiling boster, and for him they loud cheer, but they hate the knocking rooster, long to pelt him in the ear. Boost your country and your business, boost the people in your town, they will dub you wise and witty and you'll gain a wide renown.—Ex.

CIVIL WAR VET DIED ON XMAS DAY

Lived Around Iowa Falls for Over Fifty Years

W. H. Sherwood passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Geo. W. Johnson, on Chrstmas day, at the age of 82 years, 9 month, and 25 days. The funeral was held at the house Saturday afternoon and bural took place in Union cemetery. The service was in charge of Rev. C. E. Cushman, with Mrs. L. H| Sour offering prayer.

William Harrison Sherwood was born June 30, 1842, in Orleans county, New York, where he spent his boyhood days. In 1861 he responded to the call of his country by enlisting n Company A, of the 8th New York Heavy Artillery, and served until the spring of 1865. During this time, August 25, 1864, he was taken prjsoner at Ream Station and kept as such about seven months After service. he spent four years in Pennsylvania. Then one summer in New York; then returned to Pennsylvana.

December 25, 1867, i Pennylvania e was un.'ed in marriage to Miss Anna L. Tressler, who djed October 22, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood came to Iowa jn 1870. To them were born three children, Leon Sherwood of Goodell, Iowa, and George Sherwood and Mrs. Geo. W. Johnn sf this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood located first in Franklin county, Iowa, in 1870 and then on a farm northeast of Iowa Falls in 1879, over half century o. There they lived upt'il they came to town. There he reared his family and spent the active years of his life. Thew riter has known Mr. Sherwood for thirty years and we always had a high regard for him. He was one of those rough and ready pioneer types that feared nothing and spoke his mind in no uncertain way. There was no need of running about tryng to find out where he stood.

Mr. Sherwood was a prisoner in the jnfamus Libby prison and the writer listened once with much interest to his story of the treamen given the union soldiers in his wretched place. Mr. Sherwood was an active member of the local G. A. R. post and always took an active interest jn politics. While he was a Republican, hew as more of a free lance and voted accordin to his convictions.

For sometime before his death he gradually failed. The candle had simply burned to the socket. The human machine had run its course. On December 10th hes ustained a fall and severely injured his hip and this probably hastened the end. The writer and the old neighbors and old-time friends have a deep feeling of respect for Mr. Sherwood and a feeling of kindness for the family jn their sorrow—Iowa Falls Press.

MUST DIET TO RETAIN BEAUTY

"Fat Wave" Is Real Danger to America

Paris, France— American women are getting plumper and plumper, and the famous American "line" so envied by European women, is fated to disapear unless the whole femjnine population of the United States is put on a diet.

Believe it or not, its the opinion of Doctoresse Marie Heilbrunner, a specialist in human avoirdupojs, who has just returned to France after lecturing in various centers of the United States.

"I was amazed t discver the difference in American women since my last visit in 1913," Dr. Heil-Brunner told Universal Servjce.

"The war made European women thin, but jt made American women fat.

"I was struck by the fact that one very seldom sees a thin woman on the streets of New York or Chicago or other big cities. If they are not actually fat they seem to be—well plump. It is all very well for American women to have the most beautjfu faces in the world and the most lovely complexions, but of what account is a beautiful face, if the owner of it wabbles?

Deplorable Tendency

"But this deplorable tendeccy toward overweight of the American woman is only the natural consequence of her modern existence.

"In the old days, the pioneer women were thin. You can't get fat when you have to chop half a cord of stovewood a day and carry a dozen buckets of water from the well and raise six or seven kids and do all your own cooking and work.

"Nowadays the American woman or at least most of her, is the most pampered individual on earth. She doesn't have to move hand or foot with real labor. 'f she has no servant most of the hard work is done by electricjty and mechanical contrivances.

"Formerly she used to ride a horse or bicycle or walk for dsitraction Now she gets in a limousjne, jitney or subway when it's only a question of a few blocks, and her amusement is to sit inanimate jn a theatre or movie munching chocalates or fudge.

"It used to make me smile to see an American woman consume three jce-cream-soda concoctions at the soda fountain of a drug store and then walk back to the prescripton de department for somethin gto make her thin!

"The fat wave is a real danger to America, not only from the esthetic but also from the physical pojnt of view. Did you know that a baby born to a very fat woman is seldom healthy in after-life? That's because he starts his existance with a superfluity of the elements which make flesh, jnstead of those which make blood and bones.

Anti-Fat Prescriptjon

"If I should be asked to give my prescription for gettjng thin, I would say:

1. Stop eating everythng you like—because that way you won't eat too much.
2. Leave bread jn all its forms enirely alone.
3. Eat plenty of acid fruits—grapes are good.
4. Drink sparingly and never milk or booze.
5. Give the cold shoulder to butter.
6. Throw the housemaid and the electric washer and ironing apparatus out of the kitchen and do your work yourself.
7. Scrub your own floors.
8. Clean at least one window—well—every day.

Walk at least five blocks every day.

10. Don't consider the job done just because you've lost three pounds

"Those are the ten commandments for fat people. I have yet to meet a woman who would obey them all.'—Hampton Chronicle.

THEY ALL ADVERTISE

A hen is not supposed to have
Much common sense or tact ,
Yet every time she lays an egg
She cackles forth the fact,
A rooster hasn't got a lot
Of intellect to show.
But none the less most roosters have Enough good sense to crow.
The mule, the most despised of beasts,
Has a persistent way
Of letting folks know he's around by his insistent bray.
The busy bees they buzz,
Bulls bellow and cow moo,
The watchdo, barks. the gander quacks,
And doves and pjgeons coo.
The peacocks spreads his tail and squawks,
Pig squeal and robins sing,
And even serpents know enough
To hiss before they sting,

One Mother's Tribute to Daughter-in-Law

When I first saw my son Tyler's angelic manner under his wife's regime I held my breath, because in the old days Tyler in a beatific state of mind meant Tyler getting ready to break out in a new place.

But as time goes on and the serenity remains unbroken, I repeat to myself that perfect line from the "Just So Stories"—"Not always was the Kangaroo as now we behold him"—a text that I recommended to all mothers who have seen their brisk sons neatly trained by well-selected wives.

Indeed, the longer I live the more ready I am to believe that a young man's wife may be better acquainted with his actual current present day self than his mother can possibly be. My daughter-in-law sees in her husband a forceful man of affairs on whose judgment she implicitly relies. I respect his judgment, too, in a way, but I cannot help knowing that he is the same Tyler who, at the age of four, howled himself into a high fever one day because I would not let him lead a bloodhound in the parade when "Uncle Tom's Cabin" came to town.

Mothers view their sons with what psychologists might call an "associative fringe." We are handicapped by assorted memories. We cannot estimate our sons exactly as their wives estimate them. They came upon us at a different stage.—"A Maternal Philosopher" in the Atlantic Monthly.

Observation Relieved Monotony of Illness

It has often been my feeling that perhaps the happiest man is the healthy bookworm who, by laying out a quarter for a second-hand volume, can get as much pleasure in a week as the other fellow, more dependent upon expensive entertainments and indulgencies that draw on his wad. The former is among that happy class that can say with the poet, "My mind to me a kingdom is; such pleasant joys therein I find."

But I discovered his equal the other day when visiting a sick friend in Outremont whose house adjoins a vacant lot, says the Montreal Herald. I found him sitting comfortably on the veranda overlooking that lot and studying it through a pair of field glasses.

He asked me: "How many kinds of plants would you suppose there is in that field?"

"About half a dozen," I replied.

"I have already found 77," he assured me, and went on to name them. Confinement to a veranda did not worry him much.

Man's Feathered Friends

Birds are closely allied to the British farmer, shepherd and sportsman and those who are wise in bird lore, rely on their feathered friends for information and warning. The wryneck is the woodman's bird, its hawklike cry in April giving the signal for the stripping of oak trees' bark. The yellow wagtail is a farmer's bird, ushering in the time of spring sowings. As the sandpiper is the angler's companion, the wheatear keeps the shepherd company on lonely downs. Even the miller has his bird in the redwing, called "windmill thrush," since the working of its wings suggests the revolving of a windmill's sails, while it is supposed to seek shelter by windmills in hard weather. Redwings now arrive in force; the pity is that few windmills are left to keep up the traditional association.—London Mail.

Expert Shingle Weavers

In spite of the multiplication of efficient machines to lighten and simplify labor, shingles are still woven (or packed) by hand. No machinery has yet been invented capable of eliminating the expert shingle weaver. Examine a bunch of shingles as the carpenter takes them apart for shingling the roof, and you will see the unique process by which the compact bunch has been woven. Now a wide shingle, now a narow one, makes the bunch the exact width, and all day long the weaver stands and seizes shingle after shingle thrown out from the sawing machine, and without any false moves weaves them into compact bunches. The term shingle-weaver has been extended by custom, till it now applies to anyone who works in any department of a shingle mill.

Scriptural Translations

Every year scholars are toiling to translate the Scriptures into more and still more dialects. Thousands are plodding all over the globe to put these translations in the hands of all peoples. In the interiors of distant countries, far up the Amazon valley perhaps, or into darkest Africa, where the Bible has never been, colporteurs are tramping with their packs. Motorcars are carrying the Bible across the desert from Damascus to Bagdad in 48 hours, a journey that was once a matter of six weeks, and by fastest camel post a trip of nine days.

Monuments to Apples

Monuments or markers have been erected to a few of the most noted varieties of apple. In 1895 a monument was built to the Baldwin at Wilmington, near Lowell, Mass., The first in New York was erected in the town of Camillus, Onondaga county, on the original site of the Primate apple trees of John T. Roberts of Syracuse, in 1903. There followed one to the Northern Spy in 1912, and the McIntosh Red in the same year. A monument to the Wealthy was erected at Excelsior, Minn., in 1912.

One Occasion When His Mind Worked Qu

Smith was a freshman, older most of his class. He was tall, and slow. His mind, like his worked slowly, and the nervo fessor in mathematics, after a and careful explanation, was wont to say:

"Well, Smith, if you will go over that explanation carefully and meditate on it, I think you will understand. Meditate, Smith, meditate."

So Smith became "Meditate" Smith to his fellow students.

One evening a party of students gathered in the room of one of their number, and Smith was one of them. The meeting was for fun and perhaps mischief, and such a meeting was an infringement of rules.

When the jollity was at its height a warning came that the professor was coming to investigate. The room was cleared at once. Smith as usual was the last and, hearing steps approaching, he crawled under the bed, seeing no other way of escape. Here he sat doubled up like a jackknife awaiting the event with no little apprehension.

The professor entered, looked about him, saw that the room was empty, then turned to depart. As he closed the door, a thought seemed to strike him; he re-entered the room and looked under the bed.

"Hey, Smith, what are you doing there?" he cried.

Smith turned his head with difficulty.

"Meditating, professor."

The professor withdrew.—Youth's Companion.

Allowing "Off and On" Every Year Counts

A lawyer, noted for his success in cross-examination, found his match in a recent trial, when he asked a long suffering witness how long he had worked at his business of tin roofing. The answer was:

"I have worked at it off and for some time, but have worked it steady for the last 12 years."

"How long off and on have you worked at it?"

"Sixty-five years."

"How old are you?"

"Sixty-five."

"Then you have been a tin roofer from birth?"

"No, sir; of course I haven't."

"Then why did you say you have worked at your trade 65 years?"

"Because you asked how long off and on I had worked at it. I have worked at the trade 65 years—20 years on and 45 off."

SIX OUSTED FOR POSTAL LOBBY

New Suspends Supervisors in Alleged Plot to Hire Senate Clerk.

Washington.—Six responsible postal officials in as many cities have been suspended from duty, an employee of the senate post-office committee has been discharged and the clerk of the house post-office committee has resigned as a result of an official investigation into the use of money to influence postal pay legislation.

The officials suspended all are members of the legislative committee of the National Association of Postal Supervisors and held some of the most important positions in the postal service.

They are:

Peter McGurty, acting superintendent of mails, New York city, who has been in the service 27 years.

James M. Greig, postal cashier, Boston, in the service 17 years.

Peter Wiggle, acting postmaster, Detroit, in the service 24 years.

Harvey M. Tuttle, assistant postmaster, Springfield, Ohio, in the service 25 years.

J. J. Fields, superintendent of mails, Louisville, in the service 33 years.

William Samson, assistant superintendent of delivery, Chicago, in the service 36 years.

The discharged senate employee was E. H. McDermott, assistant clerk of the senate committee, who is described in a report of postal inspectors as the central figure in an arrangement by which he received $2,600 to work for the interests of the association of postal supervisors.

Frederick C. Reidesel, clerk of the house committee, was declared in the report to have been presented a "gift" of $1,000 by the supervisors' association, and he announced that because of "the unhappy notoriety" he had resigned.

The investigation, results of which were announced in a statement by Postmaster General New, was undertaken by the Post-Office department after Mr. New had conferred with President Coolidge. An investigation also was conducted by the Department of Justice. It resulted only in the announcement by Attorney General Stone that no law had been violated.

600,000 Soldier Bonus Checks Are Put in Mail

Washington.—Speeding through the mail to ex-soldiers were approximately 600,000 adjusted service certificates, representing $750,000,000 of the bonus voted by congress.

The accumulation of certificates, 250 mail sacks full, was put into the mails at midnight.

The law provides the certificates could not be issued before January 1.

The new year also found ready 30,000 checks for amounts of $50 or less, representing the cash payment for soldiers who served only a short period, but the law requires that these shall not be mailed until March 1. Payments of the certificates also cannot be made before that date, except in the case of veterans who have died since applying for the bonus. On these certificates the bureau is prepared to make immediate payment.

52,000 See Notre Dame Win U. S. Championshi

Pasadena, Cal.—The Four Horsemen of Notre Dame—Layden, Crowley, Stuhldreher and Miller—playing their last game for their alma mater, before 52,000 spectators, handed her a national intercollegiate football championship here on New Year's day as a fitting climax to a long, honorable and spectacular career.

Notre Dame, scoring 27 points to the 10 amassed by the powerful Stanford university team, Pacific coast champions, rules undisputed over all that is football in these United States.

Foremost in the thrusts that overcame the crushing attack of the Stanford players were Elmer Layden, the slender fullback, who registered three touchdowns. Two of them were the result of 70-yard runs after intercepting Stanford passes deep within his own territory.

Visitor Falls Dead Waiting to See Coolidge

Washington.—Samuel R. Boss fell dead while standing in line outside the White House waiting to pay his respects to President and Mrs. Coolidge, who held a public New Year's reception here.

More than 4,000 visitors called at the White House during the reception hours. The President talked several minutes with a G. A. R. veteran, R. G. Scott of Linn Creek, Mo., who attended the Lincoln's New Year's reception in 1864.

Thaw Gets $100,000

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The trust fund established by the late William Thaw produced an income of more than $1,000,000 during the last four years. Harry K. Thaw will receive $100,000 of the fund.

"Rest" Law Unconstitutional

St. Paul.—The state law commanding one day of rest in every seven was on Friday afternoon declared to be unconstitutional by the state supreme court.

Chicago.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s annual review of business in part is as follows:

The year 1924 was a period of fluctuating business, with sharp irregularities and contrasts, yet with a distinct gain in activity during the closing months. Political uncertainties, by causing added conservatism and hesitation, accentuated the contraction in trade which had occurred in various lines, but the result of the national election in November had a reassuring and stimulating effect and brought about a decided revival.

The increased confidence that developed throughout the country was manifested both in the placing of deferred orders and in the greater willingness to make forward commitments, while the sound basic conditions, with the improved financial status of the grain farmers, were regarded as foreshadowing a continuation of the commercial expansion. As the volume of transactions enlarged, mill and factory operations, which in numerous instances had fallen to low levels during the summer, began to recover more rapidly, and the average rate of steel output had reached 85 per cent by the end of December.

The previous curtailment in different industries had been necessitated by the disproportion between supply and demand, but producing facilities were more fully utilized when buying subsequently broadened, and many additions to working forces were made.

With an estimated value of $9,479,902,000, the farm crops of the United States in the past year were worth $753,000,000 more than those of 1923.

Chemist's Report Shows McClintock Died of Fever

Chicago.—Chief Justice Harry Olson of the Municipal court, named by William D. Shepherd, chief beneficiary of the will of William Nelson McClintock, youthful millionaire, as the instigator of the McClintock death inquiry, offered to reveal the reasons behind the investigation if released from liability by Mr. Shepherd.

Judge Olson's offer followed a chemist's report to Coroner Oscar Wolff and State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe that McClintock's death was caused by typhoid fever, eliminating completely any suspicion of poisoning.

FRANCE WANTS 90 YEARS TO PAY

Moratorium for Ten Years Also Requested by Premier Herriot.

Washington.—France's first actual diplomatic proposals for a debt settlement with the United States reached Washington and were laid before President Coolidge and the cabinet.

Though carefully given a semi-official status and described as guarded in tone, still the communication constitutes a definite step toward liquidation of the $4,000,000,000 French war debt.

They were forwarded by Ambassador Herrick from Paris and were signed, it is said, by Premier Herriot and Finance Minister Clementel.

In substance, France hints at a proposal to pay off the debt in about 90 years, first stipulating for a ten-year moratorium, and afterward amortizing the obligation at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per annum.

Premier Herriot, it was said, vehemently denied any intention on France's part to repudiate the obligation.

A spokesman for the President said information reaching the White House had solidified Mr. Coolidge's previously expressed opinion that the French government had no intention of repudiating its debt to the United States. The President believes, it was said, that reports attributed to M. Clementel, the French minister of finance, suggesting repudiation, were exaggerated or misinterpreted and that the French government has every intention of making good its debt.

Another development which served to clarify the mystery surrounding the debt negotiations was an explanation by the British embassy here that Montague Norman and Sir Alan Anderson, officials of the Bank of England, had come to the United States on private business and not in connection with the debt question.

192 Passengers Escape From Burning Steamship

Wilmington, Del.—Safe aboard two special trains, one speeding north, the other south, passengers and crew of the Clyde liner Mohawk left here after being brought ashore at Lewes, Del., from the fire-swept vessel, beached near there.

Behind them lay a night of peril at sea with the fury of the worst of the winter's storms on the Atlantic added to the menace of the flames as the ship fought her way from 70 miles below Sandy Hook to the Delaware capes.

Some wrapped in blankets, others in garments that showed the effects of a drenching, 192 passengers for Jacksonville and Charleston were transferred from the special train that brought them here from Lewes and sent to their destination by rail.

One hundred and nine others, including members of the crew and officials, went to New York, from which port the Mohawk had sailed on New Year's day.

Indiana Widow Kills Parents, Brother and Babe

Logansport, Ind.—Four members of the family, ranging from a grandfather to a three-year-old baby, were found murdered with a shotgun in their home near the village of Metea, eight and one-half miles from here.

A young widow, daughter of two of the victims, mother of the baby, and sister of the fourth victim, is in the Cass county jail here.

Those who were killed were Henry Bassler, sixty-nine; Catherine Bassler, sixty, his wife; John Bassler, twenty-two, and Viola Hobough, three. The widow, who was arrested, is Mrs. Emma Hobough, thirty. She talks volubly of alleged ill treatment at the hands of her family.

Mrs. Hobough was arrested by Sheriff Walter Bowyer at the home of Thomas Sheets.

$331,000,000 Army Bill Is Reported to the House

Washington. — Although President Coolidge's paring policy has been carried out in the War department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1926, reported in the house of representatives, the strengths of the army and National Guard have been left untouched.

The bill carries a total of $331,131,114, which is $6,552,159 less than the appropriation for 1925 and $270,816 under the present budget figure. Of the total amount $258,317,958 is recommended for military purposes and $72,813,156 for nonmilitary activities, including those in the Panama Canal zone.

The air service receives $2,900,000 more than is being spent during the current year.

The bill provides for an army strength of 12,000 officers and 125,000 enlisted men, exclusive of 8,000 Philippine scouts. There are now 11,800 officers in the army, the report states, which number will be increased to full quota by the graduations at West Point. The latest official figures place the enlisted personnel at 118,750, exclusive of 7,105 Philippine scouts.

Jury Finds Kid McCoy Guilty of Manslaughter

Los Angeles, Cal. —The "hanging jury" of Los Angeles county ended 78 hours of deliberation by convicting Kid McCoy (Norman Selby) of manslaughter in the death of Mrs. Theresa Weinstein Mors. The verdict ended the most protracted jury session of modern Los Angeles court history. The verdict carries a penalty of one to ten years' imprisonment.

Three members of the jury gave the panel the name of the "hanging jury." Four weeks ago they helped vote the death penalty against Harry Garbutt, an Illinois ex-convict, in another murder case.

AFTER EX-SERVICE MEN AS MEMBERS

"Every ex-service man a Legionnaire" is the slogan for the American Legion in the department of Oklahoma which has just been announced by the new department commander, J. F. Hatcher. And if he is as successful in translating that slogan into reality as he has been in his educational work, Oklahoma is going to have more Legionnaires by the end of 1925 than ever before.

The new commander, born and reared on an Oklahoma farm, graduated from Central Teachers' college at Edmond, Okla., and from the University of Oklahoma and the University of Florida. He was elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa, the national honorary scholarship society. He taught school in several Oklahoma towns and then at the Central Teachers' college. He has for the past six years been principal of the junior and senior high schools at Chickasha.

At the present time Mr. Hatcher is president of the State High School Athletic association and a director in the Oklahoma Educational association. He is a director of the Chickasha chamber of commerce and president of the Lions' club there. He is a past commander of Raymond T. Hurst post, No. 54, of the Legion at Chickasha.

Commander Hatcher enlisted in the United States navy in 1917. He served in the aviation section at Pensacola, Fla., and at Norfolk, Va. He attended the Naval academy at Norfolk and was commissioned as an ensign in the Naval Reserves. He served in the mine project, shipping mines to the North sea, until the close of the war.

First Contribution to Gresham Memorial Fund

In response to the international crusade started by the Evansville (Ind.) American Legion post to create an international war memorial at the grave of Private James Bethel Gresham, the first American who "went west" in the World war, the New Cumberland post, Pennsylvania, wired what is believed to be the first contribution to the Evansville post to apply towards the Gresham memorial. It was the first contribution sent by a Legion unit from the department of Pennsylvania and probably the first in the country. Private Gresham's grave is now marked only by a milk bottle containing a note in faded letters: "James Bethel Gresham. He died for you and me."

If the plans of Evansville post are realized, a beautiful monument will be erected with the central figure to represent Private Gresham. The other figures will represent the first soldier to die on the battlefield for the other allied nations engaged in the recent war.

Newsboy Gives Savings to Legion's Home Fund

Here is a modern parallel of the widow's mite. An American Legion solicitor out seeking funds for the home fund of James Dickey post, Portsmouth, Ohio, was stopped on the street by a newsboy. "Here Mister," the lad said, "I've been selling papers for two weeks now, and I've saved, outside of what I just had to buy to live, a dollar. I want to give it to the Legion. You fellers gave more than that for us." And the newsie poured into the hand of the ex-service man a dollar in pennies and nickels and hurried away. "James Dickey post is justly proud of that contribution," said a Legionnaire. "It makes us determined to give the best we have in peace-time service."

Coon Hunt and Feast Brings New Members

Coon dogs, ranging in pedigree from nondescript "muts" to the most valuable of animals, were in unusual demand recently in Terre Haute, Ind. The reason was to be found in the annual coon hunt staged by American Legionnaires of Terre Haute. Members of the Legion from miles around gather for this annual hunt in such numbers there aren't enough dogs with coon-hunting proclivities to go around. The Legionnaires put on a big coon feed and membership rally after the hunt, which increased the membership of the post at the expense of the coon population of the region.

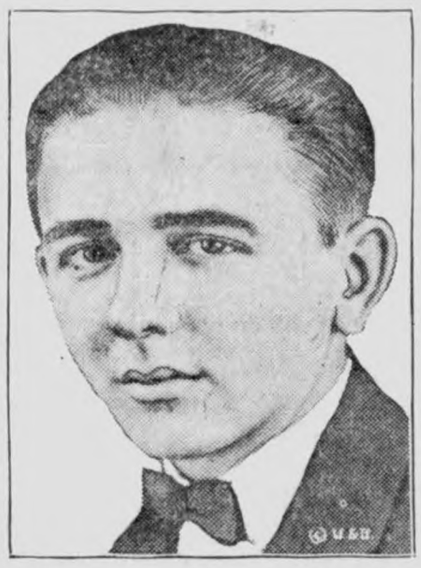
Copeland Thinks Senate Death Chamber

Royal S. Copeland, junior senator from New York, is the only physician in the senate, if one's memory serves. He is not only a doctor but a professor of medicine, health officer and writer on health and sanitation. And he has an idea that the senate is a death chamber because it has no windows. The senate has passed a resolution embodying his ideas for improvement in the ventilation. The next step will be the drafting of plans by the capitol architect. And then the senate "can get in touch with the outside world," if it so desires.

There are recorded more than 20 deaths in the ranks of United States senators and former senators within the brief span of seven years. Here is what Senator Copeland says about the situation:

"The only air that reaches the senate chamber is pumped through piped inlets. The only sunshine comes through the heavy ornamental glass-paneled roof. It is common knowledge that fresh air and direct sunlight are requisites of health. I do not doubt that many of the senators whose names make so long a mortality list would have had not months but years added to their lives had they been able to work under more healthful conditions. I do not doubt that the existing system of ventilation and absence of direct sunlight constitute an immediate menace to the health of every member of the senate today."

Liska Wins Good Roads Essay Prize



John Liska, high school youth of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., (portrait herewith) is announced as winner of the H. S. Firestone four-year university scholarship for 1924, his essay having been chosen as the best of those submitted in the fifth good roads essay contest. Liska's essay represented Wisconsin in the national competition, in which one essay was entered from each state and territory. It had previously been selected as the best of those from his state by a committee named by the extension division of the University of Wisconsin. More than 200,000 high school students throughout the United States and territorial possessions sought the honor which fell to him. The contest was conducted by the highway education board, of which Dr. J. J. Tigert, United States commissioner of education, is chairman. National judges who reviewed the state essays were James J. Davis, secretary of labor; Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of Ohio State university, and Merle Crowell, editor of the American Magazine. Honorable mention was given to the essays of Richard Arimibu, Hilo, Hawaii; H. Harold Kelley, Pittsburg, Kans., and Viola Greene, Willimantic, Conn.

Liska's scholarship is worth more than $4,000 and will carry him through any college he chooses. Announcement of his success found him at work in Chicago, preparatory to entering college.

Duke University Now Instead of Trinity

William P. Few, A. M., Ph. D., LL. D. (portrait herewith), is president of Trinity college, Durham, N. C. It was established in 1838 and has 46 instructors and 1,232 students. Its present endowment is about $3,000,000 and the value of its plant about the same. Mr. Duke offers a further endowment of $6,000,000 and a yearly income of 32 per cent of the interest on $40,000,000.

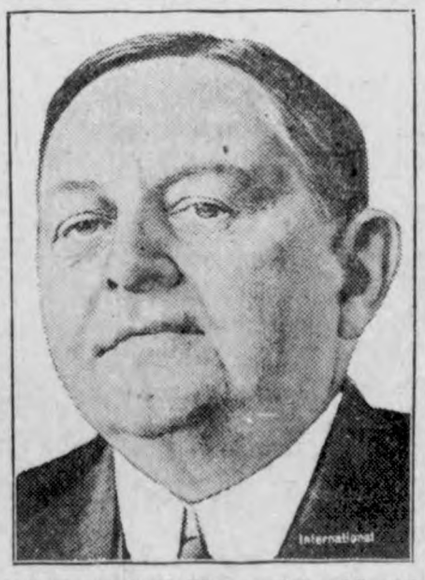
Doctor Few, who has been president since 1910, says Trinity will change its name to Duke university, in order to participate in the trust fund. Well, Trinity—or Duke—need not feel lonesome. There are many colleges in the United States bearing the name of benefactors and not a few which have changed the name on that account.

Harvard university was named for John Harvard, who left it half his estate, amounting to 779 pounds, 17 shillings and 2 pence and his library of 320 volumes.

Colby university, Waterville, Maine, was formerly known as Waterville college; name changed by trustees in recognition of $50,000 subscription by Gardner Colby of Boston.

Brown university, Providence, R. I., was originally named Rhode Island college, but changed its name 40 years later because of large bequest of Nicholas Brown, a wealthy merchant.

Underwood Muscle Shoals Storm Center



"Alabama casts its 12 electoral votes for Oscar W. Underwood!" Yes; this is the same Oscar W. Underwood (portrait herewith). He is United States senator from Alabama and one of the leading members of the senate on the Democratic side. As soon as the senate took up the Muscle Shoals tangle Senator Underwood became a sort of storm center, largely because of his bill, which contains a clause providing for government operation as an alternative in case no lessee is found for the plant on terms satisfactory to Uncle Sam. Moreover, Senator Underwood forced the investigation by the senate of editorials charging that he was planning to turn the plant over to the Alabama Power company and that he had some connection with the company.

The verbal fireworks of debate were dazzling and smelly. Senator Norris (Rep., Neb.) charged that the Underwood measure would make "Teapot Dome look like a pinhead," and "Doheny and Sinclair like pikers." He accused the President of over-riding the will of the senate agricultural committee which reported the Norris government ownership bill.

Senator Underwood declared Muscle Shoals legislation should not be regarded as a political measure. He declared the President was observing custom when he made known his attitude in his message to congress and accused Senator Norris of populist principles in advocating government instead of private operation.

THIRTY YEARS AGO WE REMEMBER—1895

"When eggs were three dozen for 25 cents; butter 10 cents a pound; milk was 5 cents a quart. The butcher gave away liver. and treated the kids with bologna; the hired girl received $2 a week, and did the washing Women din not powder and paint (in public), smoke vote, play poker, or shake the shimmie. Men wore boots, chewed tobacco, spit on the sidewalk and cussed. Beer was 5 cents and thel unch was free. Laborers worked ten hours a day and never went on a strike. No tips were were given to waiters, and the hat check grafter was unknown. A kerosene hanging lamp and a stereoscope were luxuries, and Unguentine was an infant?

No one was ever operated on for appendicitis or bought glands. Microbes were unheard of. Folks lived to a good old age and every year walked miles to wish their friends a Happy New Year.

TODAY! 1925

Everybody rides in automobiles. or flies, plays bolf, shoots craps; plays the piano with their feet; goes to the movies nghtly; smokes cgarettes drinks Rukus Juice, and blames the H. C. of L on their neighbors; never go to bed the same day theyget up, and think they are having a H—— of a time.

These are the days of suffragetting, profiteering, rent hogs, excess taxes and prohibition.

But it's a pretty good old world after all, and we thank you for our share of good of 1924. At the close of 1925 weh ope you will have missed all of the bad. and had some of the good.

SALVATION ARMY DRIVE FOR FUNDS TO CARRY ON WORK

DRIVE TO BEGIN IN THIS COUNTY

THE SALVATION ARMY WORKS IN MANY FIELDS

Their Aim Is To Benefit Humanity; They Are Always First When Help Is Most Needed

Perhaps there is no more self-sacrificing people on the earth than those of the Salvation Army. The reward of the Army lassie and laddie is not an earthly one except in the consciousness of doing something for others.

Whdrever there is human misery, and distress, they are there to alleviate it. They believe that while both men and women may be down they are never out. None can excell them in the work of rehabilitating wrecked lives and changing human derelicts into normal human beings who themselves became helpers of others.

The Salvation Army has no great organized mass in its own membership asile from its own workers. Their personnel is not compossed of prosperous business men and those who have retired in appulence, so, they rely upon the public to aid them in carrying on the work for the people.

Protestant. Jew and Catholic are all alike to them when it comes to service. There is no distinction. There is never a great calamty but they are there. In the Pueblo disaster they were the first to rush two car loals of food in from Denver. A like service they have rendered all over the country.

Thy carry on sixteen major activities and are prepared to operate in fields of service almost wholly neglected by others.

In order to finance their enterprises they make an annual financial appeal which is sponsored by the County Advisory Committee which reviews the work of the Salvation Army and submits the quotas to the various committees. The annual appeal for funds in Hancock County this year will be from January 19 to 31, and it is hoped that each community will make a hearty response to the request of the Committee.

The County Committee is as follows:—

Dr. G. A. Bemis, President.
F. E. Blackstone, Vice-President.
Frank Clark, Secretary.
G. R. Lockwood, Treasurer.
and Rev. C. H. Van Metre.

The local campaign in Klemme will be in chare of Mr. Arthur Wellemeyer.

It's a riding romance that starts in Cactus Center and ends in Times Square, New York City. Broncho bustin' in the "roaring forties"—thrills new to Broadway—daredevil stunts that'll be new to you. Hoot shows the old town that nothing is too good for the boys from the West when he steps out in New York society.

Comedy—"Dancing Love."

Special Attraction For Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 21, 22

Next Wednesday and Thursday is the date of one of our best pictures to be shown this winter. Remember the date, Jan. 21 and 22 when the "JUDGMENT of the STORM" will be here. An amazing story that lays bare the folly and tragedy of man's vices—that plumbs the depth of a mother love and man's love for woman—a compelling story that is rooted in the fertile soil of every day life! Greater than "Way Down East." with a smashing climax, tremendously dramatic, actually filmed in the blizzards and snowstorms of the high Sierras! A Palmer play with an all star cast includng Lloyd Hughes, Myrtle Stedman, George Hackathorn and Lucille Ricksen.

Don't miss this great picture, you should bring your whole family to see this picture. Only two nights, Wednesday and Thursday.

Also a comedy, "Square Sex."

MR. AND MRS. "BILL" JOHNSON HAVE SERIOUS ACCIDENT

Mr. J. W. (Bill) Johnson was the victim of a rather serious accident one day last week. As we understand it Bill had been butchering a hog and in moving the porker Bill slipped and the hog fell on him, resulting in a fractured leg. Mr. Johnson has been in a serious conditon since.

Troubles do not seem to come to Mr. nd Mrs. Johnson singly. Since writing about the above accident the report comes to us that Mrs. Johnson had the misfortune to fall and break both bones in her arm Tuesday morning, when she was going down to the basement to fire up the furnace and fell down the cellar stairway.

WHAT SORT OF A FATHER ARE YOU?

What sort of a father are you to your boy
Do you know if your standing is good?
Do you ever take stock in yourself and check up
Your account with your boy as you should
Do you ever relfect on your conduct with him?
Are you all that a father should be?
Do you send him away when you're wanting to read.
Or let him climb on your knee?

Or do you neglect him, and leave him alone
To work out the problems of the youth?
Do you ever go walking wth him hand in hand?
Do you plan little outings with him?
Does he ever look forward to romping with you,
Or are you eternally grim?

C me. father reflect! Does he know you today?
And do you know him as you should?
Is gold so important to you that you leave
It to chance that your boy will be good?
Take stock in yourself and consider the lad.
Your time and your thoughts are his due,
How would you answer your God should he ask,
What sort of a father are you?

SUCCESS

Genius, that power which dazzles mortal eyes,
Is oft perserverence in disguise.
Continous of itself implies,
In spite of countless falls, the power to rise.
Twixt failure and success the print's so fine,
Men sometimes know not when they touch the line;
Just when the pearl is waitng one more plunge,
How many a struggler has thrown up the sponge.
As the tide goes clear out it comes clear in;
In business 'tis at turns the wisest wins
And; oft, how true when shades of doubt dismay,
"Tis oftenest darkest just before the day."
A little more presistence, courage vim,
Success will down o'er failure's cloudy rim.
Then take this honey for the bitter est cup;
There is no failing, save in giving up.
No real fall, so lang as one still tries,
For seeming set-backs make the strong men wise.
There's no defeat in truth save from within,
Unless you are beaten there, you're bound to win.

Early Polo Games

It is a long vista back to the historic day when, in 1871, two cavalry teams played the first polo game on English soil with a billiard ball and hockey sticks; to Prospect park, Brooklyn, when the elder Bennett and Foxhall Keene staged the first game on American soil in 1876. Yet these two events have made polo truly international. The tactics of those early players of the eighties have been profoundly modified until the game has now become a science, in which the pony has gradually come to share the honors with his rider.

Fair Offer

A flashily dressed youth was buzzing around the foreman of a construction gang in hopes of picking up a soft job as timekeeper.

"I have nothing like that left," said the husky foreman. "You say you need work. If you need work, why don't you try hodcarrying?"

"I ain't strong enough to carry one of them hods."

"Now, look here, lad, I'll make you a fair offer. If you'll really go to work I'll call four bricks a load."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

KLEMME LEGION BEGINS YEAR WITH GOOD MEMBERSHIP

OBITUARY JANETTE SMID

Miss Janette Elizabeth Smid was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. U. G. Smid.

She was born on October 17, 1904 at Danforth, Illinois. She came to Klemme with the family in 1912, when her parents settled on a farm near Klemme.

Janette was baptized in the Lutheran Church, and after being instructed in God's Word, she was by confirmation, received into the membership of the Reformed Church.

Janette had kidney trouble from her youth and this disease was the cause of her untimely death.

She became ill shortly after Christmas and rapidly became worse until death relieved her suffering at 11:00 o'clock of the morning of January 7th, 1925.

Her age was 20 years, 2 months and 24 days. She leaves to mourn her parents, two sisters. three brothers, and many relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted Saturday aternoon, January 10th by Rev. A. A. Depping, at the home and at the Reformed Church.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank all our friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us during our recent bereavement by the death of our daughter and sister; also extending thanks for the beautiful floral offerings and thanking those who took part in the singing.

Mr. and Mrs. U. G. Smid and Children.

Jimson Weed Valuable

Both the leaves and seeds of the jimson have medicinal properties. The leaves are collected at the time of flowering, and the entire plant is cut or pulled up and the leaves stripped and dried in the shade. The leaves are poisonous, causing dilation of the pupil of the eye, and are used principally in asthma. For the collection of the seeds, the capsules should be taken from the plants when they are quite ripe, but still of a green color. The capsules should then be dried for a few days, when they will burst open and the seeds can be readily shaken out. These should then be carefully dried.

Intelligent Reading

If the books which you read are your own, mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in them which you most desire to remember. Then you may read that book the second time over with half the trouble, by your eye running over the paragraphs which your pencils has noted. It is but a very weak objection against this practice to say, "I shall spoil my book"; for I persuade myself that you did not buy it as a bookseller, to sell it again for gain, but as a scholar, to improve your mind by it; and if the mind be improved, your advantage is abundant, though your book yields less money to your executors.

When Pillory Was Used

The use of the pillory for the punishment of evil doers was only abolished in England during comparatively recent times, and was in active operation in June, 1837. This peculiar form of punishment has a venerable history, and was known before the Conquest, in the form of an instrument of torture called the stretch-neck. The pillory was usually dedicated to fraudulent dealers, sellers of sham gold rings, or counterfeiters of papal bulls, until Star chamber tyrants made it a political weapon, whereby many a noble heart was tried and tempered.

Altho the United States contains the largest corn producing regon in the wold, the human population uses only about one-tenth of the cop directly as food. The public prefers corn in the form of juicy steaks and savory hams. Cattle, swine, sheep and hogs are refiners of the raw material.

A lot of fellows boast of hearing fine sermons over the radio and stay away from the home church. They probably want to miss the contribution plate.

A number of local ex-service men have received ther government insurance policies under the adjusted compensation law. The majority of policies reach a total of around one thousand dollars. The policies have a loan value after two years similar to regular old line policies. The ex-service man does not. however, have to pay for the policy each year, as is usualy the case. as the government keeps up the payments.

Their Balloon Trip to a New Land Location

By MILDRED GOODRIDGE

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

"IT'S A strange world, isn't it?"

"Yes, and this is probably one of the strangest corners of it at the present time."

"Shouldn't wonder, neighbor. Taking in the sights?"

"Yes," nodded Dale Armstrong, and strolled on, deeply interested amid a babel of bustle and noise.

It was on the old border line of Indian territory, now known as Oklahoma.

Upon the following day a new reservation was to be thrown open to the public. A flag would drop, the rope would be lowered and the mad rush for choice locations would begin.

Long since the last of this great mob had left behind them the little border town of Brocton. There had been a traveling circus at Brocton and it had reaped a rich harvest. To this aggregation Armstrong belonged. He had engaged with the circus people for the season to make an ascent daily in a small gas balloon.

There were not enough people left in Brocton to fill a row of seats that afternoon. All the bustle and excitement was transferred to the borderland. So Armstrong had come to the scene of confusion and expectancy impelled by curiosity. He lingered by the side of a covered vehicle with two horses attached. Under its white canvas roof an old woman, a young girl and a little boy were eating their lunch.

The young lady chanced to glance at Dale. "If you are looking for something to eat," she said sweetly, "we have plenty and to spare."

"Thank you, I am not one of the pre-empters," explained Dale. "Wish I was, but I've not thought of it before. Those sandwiches look only too tempting."

"Then you must have some," said the old lady, and she made room at the impromptu table within the wagon.

"You will have a good many swifter rivals in your race tomorrow," suggested Dale.

"Yes, but I have a definite point in view," explained Nina Gordon, "and there may not be a particular rush to that part of the reservation."

"How is that?" inquired the really interested Dale.

"A friend who had been over the reservation has described to me a spot about fifteen miles toward the end of the valley," explained Nina. "He has given me landmarks and other points I may go by in selecting a location."

"Some favored part of the tract?" said Dale.

"Yes, because he is sure it will be one which the railroad will cross, near a town site. I am sure I can easily find the place, for my friend sketched me a map. It is near a grove, a creek and a hill—the only combination of the sort in the reservation."

Dale departed from the home-hearted group feeling that he had passed one of the most pleasant hours of his life. He could not get brave, winsome Nina Gordon out of his mind. He circulated among all the great crowd of land contestants. Then he incidentally learned some facts that sent him straightway back to the old canvas-covered wagon.

"Miss Gordon," he said quite gravely, "I fear you are too sanguine as to your exclusive knowledge of the proposed town site. The information has leaked out and has become general, and a large number of pre-empters are arranging to make a break for the favored section."

"Oh, dear! I was so hopeful," sighed Nina, and Dale sat studying her thoughtfully. Finally he said:

"Miss Gordon, don't think it strange if I seem to take a great interest in you and your affairs. In fact, in a measure I feel mutually concerned. I have decided to take up a quarter section of land myself. I am going to make a strange proposition to you, Miss Gordon. I wish to accompany you in the race for best choice."

Dale glanced at the mother, who was dozing in the wagon and lowered his voice. As he whispered in Nina's ear she started, her eyes expressed a rare excitement and wonder.

"Do you dare?" he asked.

"To trust to your skill—oh, yes!" she declared instantly. "Oh, the novelty of it! What a thought!"

"Then do not disturb or alarm your mother by telling her of the plan," submitted Dale. "I shall expect you at the circus grounds by six o'clock."

"I shall surely be there," promised Nina.

Just as, at the appointed hour the next morning, the signal was given for the grand rush for land location, there floated up gracefully into the air the circus balloon. There were only two aboard—Nina and Dale.

It mattered not how a pre-empter reached a location, so that the restrictions of starting were followed and evidences of first occupation were apparent. It was an exhilarating air journey to Nina. They reached their destination far ahead of other contestants.

"We shall be neighbors—I am so glad. I am so thankful to you for enabling us to secure this splendid location!" said Nina.

Neighbors, indeed! then close friends, and then man and wife, and the two farms merged into one, became the home of four happy, happy human beings.

When Engineer Outwitted the Bold Bandits

By GEORGE ELMER COBB

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

"HANDS off that throttle!"

A signal had halted the train, comprising a locomotive and a single express car. Now, at the side of the track, a sturdy Mexican of the desperado type held a magazine revolver in either hand.

The engineer raised both hands; the fireman backed up against the coal heap in the tender and followed suit.

The terminus of the branch line was Ixtacl, and here there was a little bank. It was owned by Henry Morse, who operated a larger institution in a good-sized city just over the Texas state line. The engineer of the present "special" was not an engineer. However, for two years, back in his life, he had "worked on the road."

The anxious banker tried to get the railroad company to send a special to Ixtacl to bring thence the little bank safe containing important documents and cash, and found no one willing to undertake the dangerous mission. Albion Marvin stepped to the front.

The railroad company agreed to furnish an engine and steel express car. Ben Wharton, a skilled fireman, undertook to run the gauntlet with the novice engineer on a promise of quadruple pay.

They had made the run to Ixtacl without hindrance. The little safe had been put aboard the train.

At Ixtacl no attack or outbreak was attempted. A pretense was made by the legal authorities to protect the removal of the safe. They laughed in their sleeves, however.

"That loot will never leave Mexican territory," they predicted.

Ten miles, fifteen miles, twenty miles the train progressed. Then the signal, the armed Mexican and engineer and fireman challenged and helpless, as seen.

The Mexican did not speak further. He kept his weapons leveled as if posing for a picture. Suddenly he gave a shrill, piercing whistle. Its echoes had scarcely died away when half a dozen armed men descended from a covert.

The fireman, closely scrutinizing his comrade, fancied he traced a quick glitter in his clear, scrutinizing eyes. The engineer seemed calculating. Their challenger was just in range of the exhaust cock. In fact, his face was directly upon a level with it.

Suddenly, but quite naturally, it looked, the engineer gave a lurch. His elbow met the extending valve.

Straight into the face of the unsuspecting Mexican went a scalding deluge. Blinded, blistered, in agony, he dropped both revolvers. His hands went up to his tortured eyes.

"Now, then!" shouted Marvin, and he sprang to the lever.

A dozen shots from the bandits rattled against the cab. A curve was turned.

"Saved!" uttered the fireman, with grin and chuckle.

"Hardly," qualified Marvin. "If we can only make Sonoma!" he repeated, in a business-like tone that sounded hopeful to his puzzled assistant. "I thought so!" he added half an hour later, and slowed up just in time to avoid dashing into a barricade of railroad ties piled across the rails. This time six rough characters surrounded the engine.

"Cut off that car!" ordered their leader, and Marvin obeyed.

"Now, then, go on about your business," was the added command, and at a wave of the speaker's hand his subordinates removed the obstacle on the tracks.

Open-mouthed, dejected, the fireman stared at Marvin as he resumed his duties.

"See here," he finally observed, "they've got what they were after."

"Yes, the express car," nodded Marvin gayly. "It will take them an hour to burst in that steel door to get into the big safe."

"Well, then—"

"By that time we shall be at Sonoma."

"You keep saying 'Sonoma,'" rather irritably observed the fireman. "What's Sonoma got to do with it, anyhow?"

This much: To the advancing mystification of the fireman, as they neared Sonoma, instead of running on the main track, Marvin slowed up, set a switch to a long siding running to a mahogany forest a mile or two distant, halted amid a lonely solitude and drew forth and blew a signal whistle.

Within a few moments a responding "honk! honk!" came from a near roadway and an automobile appeared.

"Now, then, off with that coal!" ordered Marvin, and a brief burrowing revealed the little strong box that had never seen the inside of the steel express car.

Four armed men were in the auto. The train was abandoned, the run started for the Texas border.

It was early the next morning that Albion Marvin reported to Henry Morse with a rather proud look of expectation on his handsome features.

His faithful assistant, the fireman, left the banker, his face in a broad grin over his quadruple reward.

When Albion Marvin went up to the Morse mansion that evening to relate his story to his delighted employer, Helen Morse was waiting for him, and when he left the house later he knew that he had won her for a bride.

COWS NEED PROTECTION

Winter Weather is Likely to Cause Slump in Production

Unless dairy cows are properly housed and cared for milk producton will fall off considerably during the winter months, at a time when the price o fdairy products is best. Due to lowerproduction and export trade, the butter storage surplus already has been reduced from 58,000,000 pounds in September to less than 23,000,000 pounds in December.

In order to protect cows against undue exposure, C. B. Filey, dairy extension man, Iowa State College, gives a few pertinent rules for winter.

See that the cows are warmly housed.

Take the chill off the water.

During zero weather or below let the cows out only during the middle of the day and not longer than from one-half to one hour.

When the weather warms up above zero and the wind breaks, thec ows maye be let out of doors from about 10 a. m. till 3 p. m.

CRISIS FOR THE SCOTCHMAN

A certain canny scotchman had carried on a courtship of long duration without definately committing himself. The girl, if she worried herself at the long probation, gave no sign until one morning her tardy lover, thumbing a small notbook, said:

"Maggie, I hae been weighing up yur guid points, and I hae already gotten ten. When I get a dozen I'm goin' tae ask ye the fatalquestion."

"Well, I wish ye luck, Jock," answered the maiden. I hae also gotten a wee book, and I hae beenputtin down your bad points. There are 19 already and when it reaches the score, I'm gain accept the blacksmith

Carlyle Is There

Carlyle is sometimes as irresistible as "The Campbells Are Coming," or "Auld Lang Syne." He has described some men and some events once and for all, and so takes his place with Thucydides, Tacitus and Gibbon. Pedants may try hard to forget this, and may in their labored nothings seek to ignore the author of Cromwell and the French Revolution; but as well might the pedestrian in Cumberland or Inverness seek to ignore Helvellyn or Ben Nevis. Carlyle is there, and will remain there, when the pedant of today has been superseded by the pedant of tomorrow.—Augustine Birrell.

On the Contrary

Maud (newly married)—You look very melancholy, George; are you sorry you married me?

George—No, dear, of course not. I was only thinking of all the nice girls I can't marry.

Maud—Oh, George, how horrid of you! I thought you cared for nobody but me.

George—That is so, my dear, I wasn't thinking of myself, but of the disappointment they have had!

Extravagance

This is a 'Pat' and 'Mike' joke. They went hunting one day. They were out after squirrels. Finally Pat spotted a little gray squirrel up high in the branches of a tall swamp oak tree. He took careful aim and blazed away. The squirrel dropped. Mike looked first at the dead squirrel and then to the topmost branch.

"Pat," he said, "you wasted your ammunition. The fall would have killed him."

Few Have, or Acquire, Good Thinking Habits

The average man works about eight hours a day, or is supposed to. The rest of the time is divided about equally, so the theory runs, between recreation and sleep.

Of the 16 waking hours how many are devoted to thinking? Psychologists tell us that a tenth is a liberal allowance, and, in actual practice, from that down. Only a little more than an hour and a half out of the twenty-four occupied in thinking!

Thinking is one of the most difficult and trying of occupations, says Collier's. Were this not so it is probable that we might spend more time at it. To prove this, try to concentrate your mind on the book you have just read; on the lecture you have recently listened to; on the important interview you have just had. Try to remember and recount to yourself, item by item, just as much as you can of the thing you read or listened to. It will tire you out. Unless you have trained yourself to the task your mind will wander—you will lose the thread.

Psychologists recommend the cultivation of thinking habits; they recommend less reading and more thinking about what you have read and heard and seen.

"As we do this well or ill," says John Stuart Mill, "so will we discharge well or ill the duties of our several callings."

Glass Flowers Close Imitation of Nature

Marvelous artificial blooms that resemble nature's finest specimens in every respect except scent, are now being made by expert glassblowers.

Every part of the flower or plant is faithfully reproduced, from the long, delicate stems and colored petals to the almost invisible pollen.

The first thing which the maker of these wonderful blooms does is to blow the petals from glass as thin and fragile as tissue paper. The glass petals are then shaped and colored exactly like the natural ones.

Some of the rarer plants cannot be easily reproduced, and often several experiments have to be carried out with different colors before a really good imitation is obtained.

These glass flowers are used extensively in museums, both to show details of plant or flower formation and as backgrounds for displaying specimens of birds and beasts.

Antiquity and Whiskers

Tradition says that Adam wore a full beard. That is quite a natural supposition since that was before the time of razor advertisements. Beautifully executed bas reliefs have left no doubt that the early Persian kings cultivated whiskers. In fact, for further adornment they plaited them with golden thread. The Winged Bulls of Assyria are but types of those kings. The Chinese are a shaven people; the Egyptians were the same. But the Mohammedans are bearded, and Saladin's son, Turkish historians tell us, wept for fear when he saw the shaven envoys of the Crusaders. The world is, and always has been, divided into shavers and bearded. The greatest benefactor of barbers in the world's history was Alexander. He, who shaved himself to preserve his youth, shaved his army to prevent the enemy seizing their beards.

Venetian Glass

Venice has long led the world in the manufacture of beautiful glassware. Glass works were early established in that city and the taking of Constantinople in 1204 gave the Venetians the opportunity of acquiring additional knowledge of the art. During the Fourteenth century beads, false stones, and imitations of jewels, rather than cups and the like, seem to have been the chief productions of the Venice workman. Venetian glass is usually of extreme thinness, being nearly always blown, and there is an endless variety to be found in the shapes and in the application of color. Glass-blowing, like throwing clay on the potter's wheel, induced beautiful curved forms and strength of substance.

Names of Irish Towns

The following are the names of some townlands in Castleisland district, with English meanings: Ahaneboy, "Little Yellow Ford." Anglore, "Noisy Ford." Ballynaboul, "Town of the Holes." Bawnaskehy, "Lea Field of the White Thorn." Bawnaluskaha, "Bawn of the Burning." Beheenagh, "Birch Tree District." Caheragh, "Chieftaincy." Cahereen, "Little Mansion." Cangulla, "Hill of the Gallaun (Standing Stone)." Coolavanny, "The Field of the Milk." Coolnageragh, "The Field of the Sheep." Crag, "The Rock." Dooneen, "Little Fort." Dromulton, "Wethers' Ridge." Fahaduff, "Black Field." Farranabrack, "Land of the Trout Streams."

The Cob Dollar

The "cob dollar" was a Spanish dollar which at one time had wide circulation in the United States. In 1778, when the articles of confederation were adopted, the cob or Spanish dollar was used in practically all business transactions throughout the colonies. Owing to its convenience it was adopted with slight change as our standard dollar. Even the dollar sign originated on these cob dollars coined in Spain and her American colonies. The smaller Spanish coins representing fractions of the cob dollar were called "cob money."

The DAIRY

SUDAN GRASS MAKES VALUABLE COW FEED

That sudan grass makes an acceptable substitute for alfalfa when the latter cannot be had is shown by the results of a recent feeding test with dairy cows at the Fort Hayes branch of the Kansas experiment station. Two lots of four Holstein cows each were fed through three twenty-day periods with ten-day transition periods between each of the experimental periods. During the first twenty-day period one lot was fed alfalfa hay and the other sudan grass hay. The hays were reversed for the two lots during the second twenty-day period and again during the third period. In addition the cows received thirty pounds of kafir silage daily and a grain mixture in proportion to their production.

When the cows were fed alfalfa hay they produced 2.8 pounds or about 13 per cent more milk than when they were fed the sudan hay. The weights of the cows showed no significant changes as a result of the change in rations. The cows seemed to prefer alfalfa to sudan as there was less waste of the alfalfa hay. Their production, however, did not fall a great deal when sudan hay was substituted for alfalfa.

Sudan grass is used a great deal as a hay and pasture crop in Kansas and the southwest. It withstands a dry summer much better than most forage crops. It is a very useful emergency hay crop in the corn belt. Under Iowa conditions fifteen to twenty pounds of seed per acre are used and the crop is seeded in early June. Farmers who have no hay ground this year can make very good use of sudan grass. Yields are from one to two tons per acre.

Flies in Summer Cause Considerable Annoyance

Flies cause considerable annoyance to dairy cows during the summer and not only does the irritation caused by these flies tend to lower milk production, but the restlessness of the animals is a frequent cause of inefficient milking. A good fly spray can be made from 4½ quarts of coal tar dip, 4½ quarts fish oil, 3 quarts coal oil, 3 quarts whale oil and 1½ quarts oil of tar. Dissolve 8 pounds laundry soap in water, add ingredients of the spray and bring the whole up to 30 gallons with lukewarm soft water. This spray is guaranteed to keep off the flies and prevent the coats of the animals from becoming harsh, according to agricultural extension department specialists at Iowa State college.

Spray twice a day, in the morning after milking and in the afternoon when in the barn for silage or green food. With a portable cart, made from a half barrel with wheels attached, and a spray pump and nozzle, two men can spray 40 cows in five minutes. Thirty gallons of this mixture will spray 40 cows twice a day for ten days at a cost of one cent a cow a day.

Watch Cream Separator to Save All Butterfat

Cream separators that have not been tested for some time may be cheating their owners out of considerable butterfat every time they are used, warns C. A. Iverson, of the dairy department at Iowa State college. This is an avoidable loss which can be prevented by testing the skim milk and then regulating the separator to skim more closely.

Farmers who have the apparatus for the Babcock test can test the skim milk at home. A double-necked test bottle should be used and 20 cubic centimeters of skim milk used instead of 17.5 cubic centimeters as in the case of whole milk. Farmers who cannot do their own testing can have it done by their local creamery or can send a four-ounce sample to the dairy section at Iowa State college. A charge of 10 cents for the testing is made by the college.

Saved Time by Taking Three Meals at Once

My mother, writes a subscriber to the Youth's Companion, told us children many times over of an incident that once happened in grandfather's home when she was a girl of sixteen.

A good-for-nothing, shiftless old fellow by the name of Joe Minnick was in debt to grandfather, and in order to get what was coming to him and also to help Joe out grandfather engaged him to cut some wood in the timber section about a mile from the home place. Old Joe lived only a mile farther on from grandfather's, but, as it was customary for a day laborer to have his meals included in his wages, he walked over to grandfather's for breakfast.

The family had already finished the morning meal and my mother was clearing the dishes away when the old man came in. Mother promptly prepared the extra meal, and, since it was a mile to the timber, she put up a substantial noonday lunch.

After Joe had finished his breakfast he said to mother, "Susan, if you will put the dinner on the table, I will eat it now, for I don't like cold victuals."

Mother did so, and when he had eaten he turned to her and said: "Now, Susan, if you will get my supper for me, I will eat it here and now, and then I won't have to walk all this way back before going home."

Mother immediately cooked old Joe's supper and spread it before him. He ate with avidity, and after this third meal he turned to grandfather and said: "Isaac, I never work after eating my supper. Good evening." And away the shiftless old fellow went! Nor did grandfather ever collect the debt.

Pawnbroker Has Long Been Known as "Uncle"

Authorities differ as to the origin of "uncle" as applied to pawnbrokers. Some say "uncle" in this sense is a pun on the Latin word "uncus," a hook. Before spouts were adopted pawnbrokers used hooks to lift articles pawned. "Gone to the uncus," say these authorities, was soon corrupted into "gone to my uncle's," the pronoun "my" being supplied for the sake of euphony, according to the Detroit News. This theory receives some slight confirmation in the fact that a pawnbroker's shop is also sometimes called a "spout." This is because a spout is usually used to lift the articles pawned.

But there seems to be a more plausible theory as to the origin of "uncle" as applied to pawnbrokers. People instinctively try to conceal the fact that they have pawned an article. It is natural for such persons to pretend that money thus obtained is from a rich uncle.

Game Birds

In a certain hotel on Broadway three men who, from their conversation, were evidently fond of sports, were, after exhausting golf, tennis, etc., with the first course, now debating as to which kind of game was the best. A large, impressive individual of the professional type stoutly declared that nothing could be compared to the pheasant, while his companion was vainly trying to impress upon his mind that partridge was the best. Then the other one, more enthusiastic than the rest, decisively announced that quail had no equal, and to prove his point asked the colored waiter to settle the argument.

"Well, suh," came the unexpected answer, "for mah part, I would rathah have an American eagle served on a silvah dollah." — Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati).

The Test

The loftiest test of friendship—understood as companionship—is the power to do without it. And in this world of external confusions and separations, there is often such need. We do not yield the friendship, but must forego the companionship. Then comes the proof of our capacity for sacrifice, our loyalty, to the highest of all. We turn our faces from each other, but never our hearts, and walk our opposite ways. Gradually the heavens widen and deepen above us; we find ourselves breathing new, yet strangely familiar atmospheres, sweet with the breath of the old affection; we see ourselves—each sees the other—met once more in a Presence which has never forsaken us.—Lucy Larcom.

Little Known About Atom

No one has ever seen an atom although scientific records of today are filled with research information, all of which has been gleaned from studying the performances of groups of atoms. No microscope has ever been invented powerful enough to make an atom or even a large molecule, which is a group of associated atoms, visible, and there is little hope in this direction because the modern microscope, according to those who should know, is about as near perfect as it may be expected to become.

That's Where They Live

A man went into a telephone booth and started what proved to be a protracted conversation. He had left the door ajar. A line composed of men waiting their turn formed outside. Now and then they could hear the chap in the booth murmur, "Yes, my angel."

A drummer joined the line just in time to hear an emphatic, "Yes, my angel."

"Hello," said the drummer, "central's given somebody heaven."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Multiplication Feat

The following method is generally used in the multiplication of Roman numerals: It is necessary to remember that half of C is L, half of L is XXV, half of VI is III and half of V is II and I remainder. Write the numbers to be multiplied side by side. Double the first one and take half of the second, putting down an O if there is no remainder and an I if the remainder is one. The two numbers thus obtained are set down under the original numbers, and the process is repeated until the second column ends in I. Then cross out the lines that end in O and the sum of what remains in the first column will be the product.

Postal Service Growth

The United States postal service really began in 1639 when an office was set up in Boston tavern to receive letters from Europe. The growth has been steady ever since. High lights in its course were the appointment of Benjamin Franklin as first postmaster general in 1775, adoption of gummed stamps in 1847, free city delivery in 1863, railway post office service in 1864, rural service in 1896, postal savings banks in 1911, parcel post in 1913, airplane mail service in 1918, and daily transcontinental air-mail service in 1924.

Grapes Valuable Food

Eat grapes and fight anemia. Grapes are particularly valuable in the health diet because of the iron they contain, which helps to build up the red corpuscles of the blood. There is no need of a medical motive to persuade us to eat this delicious fruit, but to know that while we are eating grapes we are building up our circulation is surely not displeasing.

In addition to the iron the grape contains other highly valuable minerals, which it carries into grape juice and other preparations to which this abundant fruit so readily lends itself.

Souvenir Hunters Fooled

Craze for souvenirs is likely to be carried rather far at times. In the church of St. Andrew Undershaft, in the city of London, is a monument to the author, John Stow, his figure being seated at a table, writing a book. In his right hand is a quill pen, which is renewed annually. Until recent years, this pen was continually being stolen, the souvenir hunters having the impression that it was the original pen with which Stow wrote his works.

KLEMME LOSES THREE GAMES TO GARNER FRIDAY NIGHT

WILL PLAY SWALEDALE FRIDAY

K. H. S. BOYS PUT UP A HARD FIGHT BUT ARE DEFEATED

Girls and "Boy Scout" Teams Defeated by a Heavy Score

The Klemme Tossers lost a hard fought game with Garner last Friday night. With Patet and Lemke out of the game at the beginning of the game, it slowed up the boys considerably. Patet had the misfortune of wrenching his ankle when warming up which kept him from going in at the beginning. Lemke was kept out on account of not being to practice much during the week because of a bad arm from vaccination. Gibbs playing his first game showed up well and promises some real stuff for the team in the future.

Klemme started off with a bang when Wellemeyer slipped in a ringer in the first few minutes of the play. However Garner soon took the lead and kept it all thru the game.

The Klemme boys have played better basket ball by far than they did Friday night. This is the first time Klemme has ever played her larger neighbor and they promise to become real rivals.

The Klemme girls were no match at all for the fast Garner team. Garner took the lead with the first whistle and keep it throughout. The Garner team allowed Klemme to reap only one point in the first half, and the second half was nearly a repetion of the frst. Lenora Larson was out of the game on account of vaccination and this crippled the team somewhat.

Gordon was high scorer for the Garner girls, making twenty-one of the twenty four points.

WINTER TREE TRANSPLANTING

Frozen Earth Makes it Easier to Move, Says Landscapist.

Comparatively large trees may be taken up during the winter and transplanted so that their shade may be enjoyed next summer. It is easier to do it this way, usually cheaper, and less risky than to transplant the same trees in the summer, says P. H. Elwood, landscape specialist, Iowa State College. In winter transplanting, the roots are not disturbed, since they are taken up and removed in a large ball of frozen earth.

Select the loction for the tree and cover a circle about 10 feet in ditmeter with frsh stable manure to a depth of a bout one foot. The manure will soften the frozen ground surface so that the hole may be dug more easily. The hole may be dug the same depth at the hieght of the ball of earth which is to be taken up with the tree but should be somewhat wider than the ball.

Dig up a ball of earth containing the roots of the tree to betransplanted. A two inch tree requires a ball four feet in diameter and one and one-half to two feet deep, while a six inch tree requires a ball six feet in diameter and three feet deep. After cutting down to the desired depth aroun the ball, time shoul be allowed for it to freeze solidly then cut underneath the ball as much as possible and raise the tree by tying a rope near the top, tilting the tree first in one direction, then another filling underneath with soil as the tilting is done.

After raising, the tree may be moved by pulling it over and slipping a stone-boat underneath, then returning the tree to an erect position and keeping it thus by means of guy ropes while it is being moved. The stone-boat may be pulled directly over the hole and removed by tilting the tree. The tree should then be adjusted in its new location. Some well rotted manure should be mixed with the soil to refill the hole. Prune the top of the tree moderately. Guy wires may be placed to prevent tipping. Wrap hte trunk and branches with straw and heavy paper to prevent sun scald and splitting of the bark. Lastly mulch heavily with manure or litter over an area 8 to 10 feet around the trunk. This mulch should be allowed to remain during the following summer and winter, first to prevent soil drying and later to prevent excessive freezing and thawing.

BILLBOADS AND SIGNS MUST COME OFF THE IOWA HIGHWAYS

Billboards and advertising signs must come off the Iowa highways, They have no rights of any kind, property or otherwise, on the public right of way and none on other property if they interfere with the safe view of any portion of a public highway. Road officials have their orders to destroy the signs promptly after October 1st, providing the owners of the signs, after official notice do not remove them.

The Fortieth General Assembly absolutely ruled the advertising sign off the public highway. It decreed that any firm or corporation or individual guilty of erecting such a sign of any road official who neglects to destroy such a sign shall be deemed to have created a public nuisance. County attorneys are instructed to prosecute such acts against owners or road officials in civil and criminal proceedings.

All expenses incident to the removal or destruction of such signs must be borne by the owners of the signs. The law absolutely places responsibility for removal or destruction of such signs upon the road officals; township trustees for the township roads, board of supervisors for the county road system, and board of supervisors with the Highway Commission for the primary road system.

The law is definite and final. Existing signs on the right of way or private property at the order of the proper road official must come down No new signs can be erected. The language of the sections as passed by the legislature to advertising signs on hr adjoining the public high way is as follows:

Section11. BILLBOARDS AND SIGNS. Billboards and advertising Signs, whether on public or privote property, which so obstruct the view of any portion of a public highway or of a railway track as to render dangerous the use of public highway are public nuisances and may be abated and the person or persons responsible for the erection and maintenance may be punished as provided in the chapter on nuisances.

Section 12. ENFORCEMENT. Boards of supervisors and county attorneys within their respective counties, and boards of trustees within their respective townships shall enforce the last preceeding section by appropriate civil or criminal proceeding or both such proceedings.

Section 13. BILLBOARDS AND SIGNS IN PUBLIC HIGHWAYS. All billboards and advertising signs shall not hereafter be placed or erected within the boundry lines of the public highways.

Section 14. RIGHT AND DUTY TO REMOVE, All billboards and advertising signs now placed or erected within the boundry lines of the public highways shall without liability and damages, be removable.

1. By the State Highway Commission or Boards of Supervisors in case of primary roads.

2. By the board of supervisors in cae of county roads .

3. By the township trustees in case of township roads.

IOWA GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION IS VERY OPTIMISTIC OVER BOND ISSUES

Des Moines, Jan. 21—Wonderful impetus was given the movement for a state-wide system of improved highways in Iowa by the messages of retiring Governor N. E Kendall and incoming Governor John Hammill, delivered before opening sessions of the 41st General Assembly. In whole or in part Kendall and Hammil both went on record as favoring the program advanced by the Iowa Good Roads Association, which includes legislation to place Iowas primary road system under state control for construction and maintenance; enactment of a tax of two cents a gallon on gasoline used in motor vehicles; and submisson to a vote of the people at the next general election in November, 1926, of an $85,000,000 serial bond issue to hasten completion of road improvement work.

Hammill and Kendall both unqualifiedly endorsed the proposal to place the primary road system under state control for construction and maintenance, in order to retain Federal Aid for Iowa. and insure a connected, state-wide system of improved highways.

In regard to the proposed two-cent tax on gasoline, Governor Hammill urged such legislation on the ground that it is only fair that those who use the highways should pay for their construction and maintenance. Governor Kendall declared that he is opposed to a gasoline tax on the principle that it is a sales tax, but said that if additional revenue is need to finance road improvements, the Legislature should submit the gasoline tax to a vote of the people for approval.

In regord to the $85,000,000 bond issue, Governor Hammill did not come out flat-footedly for or against the proposition.

"A program which contemplates the issuing of a large bond issue at this time for highway purposes should receive your very careful thoughtful consideration before its adoption," Governor Hammill told the Legislature. "I personally question its advisability." he added.

In his message, Governor Kendall declared that the road bond issue has the outstanding merit of offering those who must 'pay the freight' the oppurtunity to accept or reject the proposition, that he urged on the Legislature the fairness of submitting both the gasoline tax and the bond issue to a vote of the people at the next general election.

"If there are those," Governor Kendall declared "who favor a gasoline tax enacted by the General Assembly without ny mandate whatsembly, but who yet oppose a referendum of the bond issue to the people themselves who are competent to determine it, there is difficulty in undestanding the intellectual processes by which they arrive at such an amlous conclusion."

With the messages of the outgoing and incoming governors received, and with the General Assembly now ready to get down to active work, good roads boosters expressed their optimism that the program to give Iowa a state wide system of improved roads on a par with neighboring states will be favorably approved by the Legislature.

As soon as road committees in the House and Senate are appointted, bills providing for state control of the primary road system, a two-cent gasoline tax and submission of the $85,000,000 bond issue to the people will be presented for immediate consideration and enactment.

close group some distance to the southwest of the sun. But above all else do not fail to make the most of your opportunities to observe the wonderful and mysterious corona which can never be seen except when the sun is totally eclipsed and which very few people ever have the good fortune to see.

Brilliant Stars in View

'Although the events of this one day dwarfs all others by comparison on the January skies, it is in midwinter that evening skies are at their best, the American Nature association points out. There are more brilliant stars in view than at any other time of the year, sparkling more than at any other time of the year, when the denser air is cold and frosty. If one could look at the stars outside of the earth's atmosphere, he would find that they do not sparkle at all but shine with a clear steady light.

"We would see the stars in the daytime too, s well as at night, for it is the atmosphere that scatters the light of the sun and makes the glare of light all over the sky that hides the stars from view by day. If we could do our star-gazing from the moon, we would be surprised to find the sky thickly studded with stars in the daytime, for on the moon, there is little, if any, air."—Mason City Globe.

ONE CHANCE IN 100 YEARS

HERE'S WHAT TO LOOK FOR WHEN SUN ECLIPSE APPEARS

Flames of Hydrogen From Moon Visible

WASHINGTON,— Millions of Americans will see on Saturday, January 24, something they probably never see again, a total eclipse of the sun in some places and a partial eclipse over the greater part of the United States. There will not be an other in more than a century.

Those who live within a belt 100 miles wide and 5000 miles long rang ing from northern Minnesota across northern Wisconsin and Michgan, the Great Lakes to New York, Long Island, Connecticut and Rhode Island, parts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Massachuessetts, will see the flaming sun blotted out on the morning of the twenty-fourth.Those who live near this path across the country—a path that ends at sunset near the north of Scotland—will see the sun shadowed in part, the extent depending on how near they live to this belt.

To Rise With "Bite Taken Out"

In Duluth, Buffalo, New York city, New Haven and many other large cities the eclipse will be total. The partial eclipse will be very large nearly total, in some of the largest cities, including Boston, Providence Albany, Philedephia, Baltimore, Washington and Chcago. As far south as New Orleans and Omoha, the partial eclipse will be large.

In most of the central states, the sun will rise more or less eclipsed; but from lake Erie eastward, all of the eclipse will take place after the sun has risen.

In New York city the total eclipse wil take place about 9:10 o'clock a. m. and the time of the greatest eclipse for most of the cities in the east that keep eastern standard time will vary but a few minutes from that. ;The partial eclipse will begin about 8 o'clock in the same section and the eclipse will be over about half-past ten.

When the eclipse becomes total the brighter stars and planets appear and also the beautiful solar cor on that the astronomer is so anxious to study. This is a magnificient halo of pearly light extending to a great distance from the sun and defferent in shape and appearance at every eclipse, says a special bulletin of the American Nature association. It is never visible except during a total solar eclipse and can be studied only at that time because its light is so faint that the glare of sunlight in the daytime hides it from view. It is only when the moon obligingly comes between sun and earth and shuts out the light of the sun that the corona shines forth in all its wonderful beauty.

What to Look For

"All those who find themselves within the path of the total eclipse should look out for the shadow band, wavy bands of light and shade that flit over the landscape and build ings just before and after the total eclipse,' says the bulletin. "The should look out for the interesting phenomenon known as the thin, thread like solar crescent breaks up into beads of light as the total eclipse is about to begin and which are seen again just as it ends."

"Look also for the scarlet solar prominences during the total eclipse which are flames of glowng gases of hydrogen and helium rising from the hidden surface of the moon to heights of thousands of miles visible beyond the edge of the moon in queer forms and shapes.

"The brighter stars and planets appear during the total eclipse, and even a little before and after it. The three planets, Venus, Mercury and Jupiter, should be seen in a

U. S. WEALTH NOW $320,803,862,000

Nation's Riches Show Increase of 72.2 Per Cent Since 1912.

Washington.—The wealth of the United States at the end of December, 1922, on the best estimates available of all property classified by the census bureau, was placed at $320,803,862,000. This was an increase of 72.2 per cent for the decade, since in 1912 the census found the nation's wealth to be $186,299,664,000.

Many difficulties and necessarily wide margins for estimate and error in putting together its calculations, the bureau said, made its findings impossible of the close application given to its population estimates.

The item of greatest value in the category of national wealth was real estate and its improvements subject to taxation, which were found to be worth $155,908,625,000. The second item in point of size was the grouped valuation of the clothing, furniture, vehicles and like property of individuals, which totaled $39,816,001,000.

Third on the list was the value of manufactured products on hand and in distribution placed at $28,422,848,000, while the next largest item was $29,505,819,000 representing real property and its improvements listed by the states as exempt from taxation.

The value of railroads and their equipment as demonstrated largely from compilations of interstate commerce commission reports, was estimated at $19,900,800,000.

The machinery, implements and tools of manufacturing industry were found to be worth $15,783,200,000, while the value of public utility property, including telegraph and telephone systems, electric light and power systems, street railways, canals and irrigation enterprises, was fixed at $15,414,447,000.

Live stock on farms was valued at $5,807,104,000, and motor vehicles of all classes were said to be worth $4,567,407,000, or nearly a billion less than the figure given for agricultural products on hand at the same time, which was $5,465,796,000. The country's possessions of gold and silver came far down on the list of valuations, being $4,278,155,000.

President Holds Europe Not Ready for Arms Meet

Washington.—Conditions in Europe still preclude any move by the United States toward another arms conference, in the opinion of President Coolidge. The Washington government consequently is making no further move toward the calling of such a conference.

The White House authorized a flat denial of published stories that an arms conference would be called early in the spring.

Mr. Coolidge still feels that the United States should await the outcome of the move made by the League of Nations to bring about limitation of armaments and should do nothing in the matter until the success or failure of that move is established.

Benny Leonard, Champion Lightweight, Quits Ring

New York.—Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, announced his retirement from the prize ring on Thursday night.

The lightweight champion, in an open letter to his friends, said that he was giving up the adulation that comes to a world's champion because his mother not only had requested him to do so, but because her health was failing visibly as a result of his continuance in the ring.

Leonard captured the lightweight championship from Freddie Welsh in 1917, after five years of battling among the lesser lights. His last battle was against Pat Moran at Cleveland, on August 11, 1924, in which he was victorious.

SECRETARY SLEMP TO RESIGN FEBRUARY 1

President's Aid to Be Succeeded by Rep. Sanders.

Washington.—Official announcement was made at the White House that C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to the President, would retire from that office within a few weeks, probably on February 1, and that the vacancy would be filled on March 4 by the nomination of Everett Sanders, now a representative in congress from the state of Indiana.

Mr. Sanders was in charge of the speakers' bureau at the western headquarters of the Republican national committee in Chicago in the recent campaign.

Mr. Saunders, who will round out eight years of service in the house on March 4, is not a "political lame duck." He did not run for re-election in November.

It also became known authoritatively that Postmaster General Harry S. New had been invited to continue in that post and that he had accepted.

It was further learned that Theodore Roosevelt, the Republican candidate for governor of New York in the recent campaign, is under consideration for appointment as director of the United States vetreans' bureau. Maj. Gen. Frank T. Hines, the incumbent, it was said, would shortly retire, although the President would be content for him to stay.

Many other changes in positions below the cabinet rank, it was stated, would be made immediately following the induction of President Coolidge into office.

Bishop William M. Brown Found Guilty of Heresy

Cleveland, Ohio. — Expulsion from the ministry was announced here as a fitting punishment for the Rt. Rev. William Montgomery Brown, retired bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Arkansas.

The reviewing body discovered no error in the trial, affirming those proceedings without exception.

Bishop William A. Leonard of Cleveland, presiding officer of the review court, explained that the power to put the sentence into effect rests with the house of bishops. That body will meet at the general convention of the church in New Orleans next September.

HOOVER REFUSES NEW CABINET JOB

Unable to Accept Offer of Agricultural Department Portfolio.

Washington.—Herbert Hoover, who years ago declined the interior secretaryship from the hands of President Harding, has refused an offer of the Agricultural department portfolio from President Coolidge. Mr. Hoover prefers to stay at the head of the Department of Commerce.

With the President's approval, Mr. Hoover issued this statement:

"In view of the press reports, it seems to be desirable to state that the President did me the honor to suggest that I consider transfer to the post of secretary of agriculture.

"He expressed his belief that the present need of that department was an administration in which emphasis should be given to solution of the farmer's marketing problem.

"To this I fully agree. Neverthless, I felt that, in the future as in the past, the greatest contribution I could make toward improvement of the farmer's position lay in the advancement of measures that make for reduction of costs of our whole distribution system, and in helping to bring about improvement and stability in the general industrial and commercial situation both at home and abroad. The farmer's problem is a problem of the nation as a whole.

"I deeply appreciate the confidence which the President has shown in me, but I have told him that I believe it would be to the best interest for me to decide against the suggestion, which I have done."

Bill Hart's Wife Denies That Film Actor Beat Her

Los Angeles, Cal.—Winifred Westover Hart took the witness stand in Judge Albert Stephens' court and absolved Bill Hart of three-year-old charges of beating her up.

Hart's attorney asked: "In the publicity about your separation you were repeatedly quoted as saying that Mr. Hart had beaten you and dragged you around by the hair."

"That was published, but it wasn't true," she said with downcast eyes.

The vindication threw the courtroom into a sensation, as Hart suddenly rose to his feet, raised a pair of trembling hands, and groaned loudly, interrupting his wife's sobs:

"I—I beg your pardon, your honor," Hart apologized, sitting down again. "But you cannot tell how great a relief this is to me."

Mrs. Hart threw the burden of marital differences upon the movie hero, detailing their domestic life from the marriage November 7, 1921, until she said Hart ejected her from their Hollywood home May 1, 1922.

"It is possible I may have one more fight," Jack told a reporter, "but I doubt it. It all depends on what materializes in the next few months."

"Have Miss Taylor's wishes anything to do with your retirement?" the reporter asked.

"Well," said Jack, "she hasn't taken any definite stand on the matter, but I think she would be pleased if I didn't fight any more."

GOV. JOHN HAMMILL IS INAUGURATED

CEREMONIES AT THE STATE HOUSE MOST ELABORATE

A new state administration began in Iowa with the inauguration of John Hammill as Iowa's twenty-fourth governor in impressive ceremonies before a joint session of the senate and house of the legislature in the house chamber.

State officers, the supreme court, military and political leaders from all parts of the state were present at the inaugural.

Following a concert by Rubinson's orchestra which began at 2 o'clock, Speaker Willis C. Edson called the joint convention to order.

A committee of senators and representatives escorted the governor and his party from the executive office to the house chamber.

The Inaugural Procession.

Leading the inaugural procession was the governor's military staff, headed by Adjutant General Lasher.

Immediately following came Governor Kendall, Governor-elect Hammill Lieutenant governor-elect Kimball, Chief Justice Faville and the joint legislative committee.

Chief Justice Faville administered the oath of office to Lieutenant Governor Kimball, who became presiding officer of the convention.

Governor Takes Oath.

Governor Hammill then subscribed to the oath of office, administered by Chief Justice Faville, and commenced his inaugural address in which he requested the co-operation of everybody in order that he might succeed in giving an administration to result in great good to the citizens and advancement of the many interests of the state.

If this, the Forty-first Iowa general assembly accepts the unanimous recommendation of the two governors Iowa has had—N. E. Kendall, who has just stepped out of office, and John Hammill, who was inaugurated immediately thereafter—it will regard enactments along the following lines to be the most important items on this winter's legislative program:

(1) Laws to give whatever assistance the state can to aid the farmer in organizing for odrerly marketing.

(2) Repeal of the public fund preference banking laws, and measures restricting conditions under which banks can loan their assets.

(3) Ratification of the federal child labor amendment, and enactment of the program of laws advocated by the Iowa child welfare commission.

(4) Addition of a woman member to the board of control, and merging of the state board of parole into that bureau.

(5) Making whatever provision is necessary to house, feed and educate all who apply for admittance to the three great state institutions for higher education.

(6) Placing control of primary road construction under the highway commission, and thus insuring federal aid to the state.

(7) Enactment of some sort of an income tax, to replace in part the general property tax.

Some of the "White Meat" in Governor John Hammill's Inaugural Address.

Our schools and colleges should be divorced from political influence.

Tax reduction can only result if revenues are kept ahead of the expenditures.

Where we find Child Labor, we find illiteracy. If it exists in one section of the country, its results will reach every other section of the country.

I think the time is nearly at hand when we will have to put a halt to bond issue which our children will have to pay and adopt the motto "pay as you go".

It costs the people no more to raise a fund to be used entirely for road building than to raise a fund to be used partly for road building and partly for paying the interest on bonds.

We must induce the great mass of American Commonwealths as they become more and more industrialized to abandon the general property tax and supplement it by taxes on personal incomes and business earnings.

There is a lot of talk about providing more money for the farmer; more debts must be paid. What the farmer wants to hear about is not where they can borrow more money but how they can pay what they already owe.

We must improve Iowa roads and the work should be carried on as rapidly as possible, consistent with the ability of the people to pay. Large obligations that are a burden and excessive, ought to be guaded against by the public the same as by individuals.

Today, with the automobile, the motor truck and buss, the road is not a neighborhood and town road but a county, a city, a state, a national highway, used by everybody from everywhere. The gasoline tax is not a sales tax. Its purpose is not to raise money by tax on sales, but to raise it by tax on road use.

The solution of the tax problem should be accomplished without detriment to the efficiency of our schools.

"Let us as individual citizens keep in mind our responsibility for law enforcement and observance of our laws, remember that the foundation of all law and order lies in the greatest of American institutions—the home.. It is the base upon which the whole structure of society rests, being the most sacred place of all things earthly. If the law of the home is not properly enforced, the laws outside of the home will be broken."

LEGISLATURE IS NOW IN SESSIO

Chief Subject of Discussion Proposed New Legislation

With a determination to do days work and to do it courageou the members of the forty-first Io general assembly have again gat ed at the State House in Des Moi to grind out such new laws as meet with their approval.

There was little time lost in eff ing an organization of both the Ho and Senate on the opening day.

In his speech of acceptance Ed the new speaker of the house dicted that the coming session wo be one of "carrying on" on work ordinary constructive legislation ther than the enactment of any gle bit of startling or outstand legislation.

"No great thing is likely to be dertaken this session," he decla Rather we must carry on the work ready undertaken. This is Io forty-first legislative step. This sion will try to get ready for that may be done in the future will do my best to fulfill the duties task that you have conferred me."

HIGH HONOR COMES TO NAVY VETERAN

Ben A. Webster, new commander of the Department of Iowa of the American Legion, is the first navy veteran, the first enlisted man and the youngest man to be elected to that position. He was born at Waucoma, Iowa, March 4, 1892.

Commander Webster was a second-class petty officer in the aviation branch at Great Lakes. At the time of the signing of the armistice he was at an officers' training school.

His record in the Legion is brilliant. He helped to organize a post at Waucoma and was commander of the Fourth district in 1923. He is a forceful speaker and an indefatigable worker. He has spent much time going from post to post, writing letters, sending telegrams and doing the thousand and one things necessary to build up and sustain the morale which has made Iowa Legionnaires famous among their fellows all over the country.

The new commander attended Shattuck Military academy for three years.

Ben A. Webster.

He then went into the lumber business and is now general manager of a chain of yards. He is married and is the father of three children, two girls and a boy. He now lives at Mason City.

Neglecting Problems of National Defense

"The American people are neglecting problems of national defense and almost overnight have forgotten the lessons of the World war," said James A. Drain, national commander of the American Legion, at a luncheon attended by two of the United States army round-the-world flyers, Capt. Lowell H. Smith and Lieut. Leslie Arnold. "I cannot emphasize too much," Commander Drain said, "the necessity of perfecting our national defense, even while we are talking peace, and preparedness in the air is not the least of our problems by any means. Our government should follow the lead you Magellans of the air have given it, that in the unhappy event of war this country might still be in the lead as regards sufficiency and efficiency of its air forces."

Loup City (Neb.) Post Expects to Be in Lead

With a membership already 200 per cent over the top, Loup City (Neb.) post of the American Legion expects to lead the Legion in Nebraska during 1925. On October 6 the post had a meeting at which Department Commander Courtney made an address. Following the meeting 55 new members were enrolled, giving a total of 80 members for the post. Commander Courtney made one of the finest talks on the Legion ever heard in the state, say Legionnaires present. "It not only had a punch in it, but a pull as well—enough to pull half a hundred into the Legion on the spot." Commander Courtney said, among other pertinent things: "If you don't like the way a Legion post is run, get in and run it yourself."

Two Lady Adjutants in Department of Florida

The department of Florida of the Legion has two lady post adjutants, one at Miami and one at Daytona. Merry Membership War

Jim Drain's recent membership message to the American Legion auxiliary, in which he said, "The potential membership of the Legion auxiliary is 10,000,000, and the most the Legion ever can have is four and one-half million. The auxiliary of the department of Minnesota has just challenged the Legionnaires of the department to a merry little membership war to determine who will have the most members at the end of 1925.

Captain's Lucky Day

Five years ago the steamship J. L. Luckenbach lost her anchor and part of the chain at a Philadelphia pier, and the captain went to an expense of several hundred dollars in an unsuccessful attempt to recover it. Just lately the crew started to hoist anchor at the same pier and up with it came the lost anchor and remnant of chain without a cent of expense.

This Bride Solves Dishwashing Problem

Some say the little bride is a poor housekeeper, and some say she is a good one. It's all in the point of view. The negative side is firmly upheld by her mother-in-law, maiden aunts and even her own mother. Those who approve highly of her methods are the other members of the sorority to which the little bride belongs.

And even a few of her neighbors who have taken advantage of a neighbor's inalienable privilege to drop in unexpectedly have yielded grudging admiration.

For no matter how hastily the little bride has departed to attend a meeting of her sorority, those whom she gathers up to bring home to dinner always find her kitchen looking neater than an office boy applying for a job. No matter how soon after breakfast one of her neighbors chooses to make the borrowing of a cup of sugar the occasion for a little chat, the kitchen never shows a sign of an eggy plate or an unwashed percolator.

"How do you ever manage to get your dishes done so soon?" one of the neighbors finally asked. "Why I declare, it isn't ten minutes since I saw you at the window waving good-by to your husband. And now there isn't a sign of a dirty dish."

The little bride giggled that silly little giggle that her husband says is the cause of his downfall.

"Well," she explained, "I loathe the sight of dirty dishes myself. And often I can't stop to wash them immediately after every meal. In fact, for a while I had to lie down for an hour after each meal and rest. The thought of those dishes nearly drove me crazy and destroyed all the good the resting did me.

"So, finally, after I had returned time and again to an upset kitchen, I decided I would just stick them in the washtub after each meal and then wash them all together at the end of each day. They go ever so much easier, particularly if I have Friend Husband here to help me, as he most always does."—New York Sun and Globe.

Copper the Unique

Copper is unique among the metals and, if permissible, we would say "big unique" at that. It is the most ancient of all the minerals, far antedating all authentic history. Excavations in Egypt have disclosed copper tools and utensils which were in use before the building of the pyramids. Its industrial importance has grown without a lapse throughout the ages until, today, it is developing more rapidly than ever. Thus, as copper has dominated the past, so it will probably dominate the future; and its complete history can never be written as both ends of the story reach far away into invisibility.

Not only do we find limitations in the history of copper as related to its uses by man but, in discoursing on its other relations, the same difficulties occur. Copper is a typical and phenomenal "mixer." It is found associated in one way or another with a great variety of substances. It exists in most soils and in ferruginous mineral waters; and all copper ores are always associated with something. It has been discovered in seaweed, in straw, hay, eggs, cheese, and meat—in short, in the liver and kidneys, and traces of it have been found in the blood of man and animals.—Compressed Air Magazine.

Mosaic Glass

Mosaic glass is produced by arranging vertically side by side threads or small canes of variously colored opaque or transparent glass, of uniform lengths, so that the ends shall form a ground representing flowers, arabesques, or any mosaic design. This mass is now submitted to a heat sufficient to fuse the whole, all the sides at the same time being pressed together so as to exclude the air from the interstices of the threads. The result is a homogeneous solid cane or cylinder, which, being cut at right angles or laterally, yields a number of tiles or copies of the same uniform design. This process was practiced with great skill by the ancients, who are supposed to have produced pictures in this way; but in existing specimens the pieces have been so accurately united, by intense heat or otherwise, that the junctures cannot be discovered by even a powerful magnifying glass.

A Message of Hope to a Man Who Would Die

By MILDRED GOODRIDGE

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I CAN'T go through with it!" groaned a haggard, desperate-faced man on one side of a garden wall.

"Oh, you beautiful world!" lisped a child in an invalid chair on the other side of the wall.

The man was Robert Dale, a city merchant. He sat in the shade of a tree near the ruins of some burned-down residence.

"There are only two ways," he muttered, darkly. "There is bankruptcy, but that reads disgrace, and I could not bear it. The other is—this!"

He drew from his pocket a loaded revolver and gazed at it fixedly.

The little child was Flora Easton, a sweet-faced girl of ten. The chair was drawn up close to a rustic table. Upon this were writing materials. As she took up a pencil, one could see from the slow, weak and erratic movements of her hand that she had only an imperfect control over its muscles.

"Fine!" was little Flora's accustomed cheery reply when asked how she was getting along.

On this especial morning her brave little heart thrilled, as for the first time she found that she could use her hand to write a word. Hitherto even the effort to produce a single letter had been a hard task.

"Oh, papa, mamma!" she cried in a wild fervor of excited delight, as almost breathless with joy and surprise she completed a whole sentence on the sheet of paper before her.

Her parents came rushing anxiously from the house at the unusual cry.

"What is it—are you ill, Flora?" quavered her mother.

"Oh, no!" dissented the agitated little one. "Just think of it—I am getting well, sure, papa! For see—I have written a whole sentence!"

And then little Flora uttered a cry of direful dismay. A great breath of wind had come along. It caught up the loose sheets of paper, it scattered them over the garden wall.

"And it was the first real sentence I have written since—since I was sick!" mourned Flora. "Why, think of it! plain as day and without tiring my hand at all, I printed out 'Never Say Die'!"

"Well, my dear," said her father, "very soon you will be able to write whole pages," and then his heart overflowed with hope at this indication that the little sufferer was on the road to recovery.

In a week the episode of the missing sheet of paper was forgotten. Little Flora, indeed, improved. Day by day she grew stronger. Many a burdened heart revived at a sight of the patient, loving little creature, who saw only love and helpfulness as her rare mission of life.

Click—the man who sat on the other side of that fateful garden wall had been too absorbed in his misery to heed the sounds about him. He got ready the deadly weapon. Then it dropped suddenly from his nerveless fingers. There had come floating down like a dove of peace, like a heavenly messenger, a sheet of paper. It fell directly in his lap. With awed staring eyes Robert Dale read the rude, scrawling words:

"Never say die!"

A quick revulsion of feeling passed over him. Whence had the message come. No one was in sight. He burst into tears, he dropped to his knees and a new strength and impulse came into his life.

Two years later little Flora and her parents attended a meeting at the town hall of the village. It had been announced some time previous that Robert Dale, a wealthy city merchant, had purchased the grounds beyond the garden wall. A meeting had been called where he was to publicly donate the land and $50,000 to build an orphan asylum.

Mr. Dale arose and made the formal tender of his beneficence to the town. Then his face grew grave and solemn, as he stated that he wished to tell why he had been impelled to his philanthropic action. He recited his experience the day when that strange message had come to him. He told how, banishing his cowardly fears, he had gone back to the city nerved to combat his business difficulties.

Then he took from a treasured corner in his pocketbook a folded piece of paper and passed it around among the audience, the precious sheet of paper bearing the words:

"Never say die!"

The little scrap of paper passed among two rows of seats. As it came to Mr. Easton little Flora uttered a quick cry:

"Oh, papa, it's my writing. Don't you remember that day in the garden?"

Not only for Dale, but for others who had felt the gentle, hopeful influence of little Flora, the rare perfume of her loving soul seemed to diffuse hope and happiness everywhere.

As Robert Dale left the Easton home the following day the lofty flight of a bird appeared to symbolize the purified aspirations of his better nature. The lark was flying straight into the face of the glowing sun, its wild, glorious note echoing like a call to life, to duty. Then it was lost to view, but in the fervor of his grateful nature, to Robert Dale it seemed as though the lark was singing at Heaven's gate!

Makes Quick Change

The Cecropia moth comes into the world a sorry looking object, its wings wet and crumpled and its body furry and disheveled, says Nature Magazine. In a few minutes, however, a wonderful transformation takes place. The wings soon spread and dry, the antennae stretch out, the body becomes fluffy, and a beautiful creature stands poised ready for flight.

Frozen Elephants

The Smithsonian Institute says that it is true that frozen elephants wei found in Siberia, and that the flesh was in such a state of preservation that it could have been eaten. However, it has no record of anyone having attempted to use the meat as food. It is understood that there are several specimens preserved in museums throughout the world.

Meaning of "Zion"

Zion is a form of the Hebrew word Siyyon. It is perhaps from an older word meaning "to be dry," "to set up" or "to protect." Arabic analogies favor the meanings "hump," "summit of a ridge" and so "citadel." Zion was properly the southern part of the eastern hill on the top of which the temple was built.

Maria Edgeworth is regarded as the inventor of the novel with a purpose, of which kind "Castle Rackrent," which sent her name into immediate fame in 1800, is a typical example. Her success with her Irish novel had much to do with turning Sir Walter Scott to the writing of prose fiction.

IOWA PROGRESSING FASTEST IN RAILROAD CROSSING ELIMINATION

The elimination of danger at railroad crossings is progressing faster in Iowa than any other state. During the period 1916-1923 Iowa improved a total of 496 railroad crossings, some entirely eliminated or the danger reduced by relocation in which the crossings were either overhead crossings and some by under passages. North Caroline stood second with 288 crossings improved, Texas third with 244, and Illinois fourth with 225. During the year 1923 Iowa improved 76 crossngs, Minnesota 85, North Carolina 57, and Texas 55. These figures are given out in a report from the Bureau of Public Roads published in "American Highways," the official publicaton of the American Assocaton of Highway officials.

Fifteen hundred people were killed on crossings during 1923 according to an estimate of the Interstate Commerce Commission. According to statistics it is estimated that during the year 17,000 persons lost their lives on streets and highways and considerabably over a million received permanent injury. Figures for the years 1921, 1922 and 1923 showing those killed and injured on railroad crossings are as follows:

	Killed	Injured
1921	1262	4,025
1922	1,359	3,b93
1923 (estimated)	1,500	5,000

CAPITOL BUILDING PROVES TOO SMALL

Additional Buildiings Within a Decade Forseen by Budget Director

DES MOINES— If the present expansion of the volume of business necessary in the state departments increases additional state buildings will have to be erected with the decade, according to in formation laid before the joint house and senate housing committee and executive council with which the committe is authorized to work by Director of the Budget E. L. Hogue.

The committe hopes to provide immediate relief by probably removing the railroad commission and one or two other commissions into office buildings in the Des Moines business district. But in time, the committee was told more state buildings must be provided.

It is probable that plans for a capitol extension will be carried out in a few years but actual construction probably will await the passing of five years.

Under a tentative plan informally discussed by the budget director and committe members, the first substantial addition to the state house would be a Hall of Justice, built along the architectural lines of the state historical building and erected next to the historical structure. The Hall of Justice would house the officers of the supreme court, clerk of the supreme court and the attorney general. The bureau of investigation would be transfered to the new building.

Evacuation of these departments, from the present state house would leave considerable room for the budget office, the state board of control the banking department, the tax and auto departments, all of which are in adequately provided for.

The next step in the extension would be the raizing of the present Bryant school building, an old structure which is being used for nearly a dozen state departments, and the erection in its place of a handsome white stone building.

ILLINOIS HAS 4,000 AND IOWA 536 MILES OF PAVING

Endeavor to Obtain Better Surfacing Made in Year

Iowa paved 97.4 miles of highway in 1924, while its next door neighbor Illinois, paved 1,005.4 miles, according to the annual report of the Concrete Highway magazine. Illinois made this large increse to her paved road system despite the fact that she formerly had 2,991 miles of paved road. Iowa had 439 miles at the close of 1923.

The total paved roads in Illinois is now, therefore 3,996.4 miles while the Iowa road system aggregates 536.4 miles.

Leads All other States

Illinois leads all other states in concrete road mileage placed during 1924, according to the Concrete Highway magazine, exceeding the previous world's record construction of 1,040 in 1923. Pennsylvania stands second with 550 miles of concrete rural highway building in the first 10 months of 1924. A close third was Michigan with 530 miles and New York with 500 miles. Indiana built 383 miles, Wisconsin 262 miles, Ohio 213 miles, North Carolina 205 miles. Other states in which more than 100 miles were built are California, Missouri, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Virginia nd Iowa. An outstanding feature of concrete pavement construction during 1924 was the emphasis placed on the need for securing better surfaces. Careful work and proper finishing methods have been insisted to a greater extent than ever before.

At least 35 states had a provision in their 1924 specifications limiting the maxmum allowable variation from true surface to one-eighth inch in dstances varyng from three to 10 feet. One state has an allowable surface variation to one-sixteenth inch per foot. Reflecting of the public's increasingly critical attitude and of the demonstrated economic value of pavement smoothness free from irregulrities has induced highway engineers to enforce finishing specifications rigorously. The result is noticeable in the superior ridng qualities of 1924 pavements.

"KING OF IVORIES" GOES OVER BIG IN FIRST STAGE WORK

EVANSVILLE,— Of all of the native born sons of Indiana who covered themselves with fame and fortune probably not not could have returned to create the stir that Harry M. Snodgrass, until Friday a convict in a Missouri prison caused when he made his first public appearance here today.

Snodgrass, who gained the title of "king of the ivories," when his brilliant piano music was broadcast from behind the prison bars made his first appearnce in professional vaudeville and drew the biggest crowd that ever attempted to get inside a theatre in Evansville.

Now people listen in on the radio and hear concerts and addresses given in cities in all parts of the United States and Canada. Scientists now promise more wonders for the present year, seeing by radio. When we can step into a California or a Fforida orange grove via radio on Christmas morning, won't it be wonderful.

MORE COW-TESTING ASSOCIATION WORK

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A detailed report of cow-testing association work in the United States and of the increase in number of associations will not be due until January 1, 1925; but figures now on file in the Bureau of Dairying, United States Department of Agriculture, indicate that on July 1, 1924, there were about 730 cow-testing associations in active operation, as against 627 a year ago. This is a gain of over a hundred during the past year, or a gain within the year of a little more than 16 per cent.

Though there was some increase in the number of associations in many states, the big gains were in a few states. Those having the largest actual increases are given in the following table:

State	Number of Asso. 1923	1924	Incr.
Michigan	53	91	38
Minnesota	55	90	35
Iowa	47	61	14
Wisconsin	151	163	12
Kentucky	10	20	10
South Dakota	4	10	6

Michigan ranks first in increased number of associations with a gain of 88, but Minnesota is a close second with a gain of 35. Wisconsin still leads in the number of associations, but Michigan and Minnesota are gaining on Wisconsin. Iowa, Kentucky, and South Dakota are also making substantial gains.

This increase in the number of cow-testing associations is very encouraging. It means that year by year more of our dairy cows are being placed on yearly test. More testing means more economical production, and more economical production benefits both the producer and the consumer.

Not Profitable to Feed Dairy Calf Whole Milk

It is readily recognized that at present prices of dairy products, dairy calves cannot be fed economically on whole milk over a long period. It is also true that approximately 45 per cent of the dairy cows in the United States are found on farms producing whole milk for condenseries, cheese factories, powdered milk factories and for the market milk trade. On these farms the milk brings a high price; in many cases $3 to $4 a hundred pounds—sometimes more.

A calf requires an average of about 15 pounds of whole milk a day until four months old. This amounts to 1,800 pounds. If valued at even such a low price as $3 a hundred, the milk alone costs $54. This does not include the cost of hay and grain consumed in addition to the milk.

Farmers making a business of selling whole milk do not have skim milk for feeding purposes and the common practice is to kill the bull calves at once or sell them for veal. Unfortunately, too often the heifer calves are also disposed of in the same way. In such cases the herd must be replenished by buying mature cows.

Excellent Fly Spray

An excellent fly spray recommended by the Iowa State College of Agriculture is as follows: Four and one-half quarts coal tar dip; 4½ quarts fish oil; 3 quarts coal oil; 3 quarts whale oil; 1½ quarts of oil of tar. Dissolve 3 pounds laundry soap in water, add the ingredients of the spray and bring the whole up to 30 gallons with lukewarm soft water. The cows should be sprayed twice a day—in the morning after milking, and in the afternoon when in the barn for silage or green feed.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Road Building Far Behind the Automobile

Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.

Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.

Yet although the mileage of Concrete Roads and Streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.

Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.

Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.

Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highways now.

VERITY

SYNOPSIS. — Incapacitated, mentally, by shock, as a result of experiences during the World war, Renshaw makes a proposition to David Campbell, wealthy, elderly man of leisure, that for a year he assume responsibility for him (Renshaw)—practically "buy" him. Doctor Stanley, lifelong friend of Campbell's, indorses the proposition, which Campbell, with some natural misgivings, accepts. The arrangement is that the young man becomes an inmate of the Campbell household, with the nominal duty of secretary.

The voice and manner of the visitor were as unresponsive as before.

"When do you want to begin?"

"Now—this minute."

"Oh! Then you came prepared to stay?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well." Campbell held out his hand. "Now, if you have no deep-rooted objections to tea, we will drink some," he added as he slowly settled back into the big chair. "And I, for one, am ready for it! Buying a man, if you will permit me to say so, is rather an exhausting business."

He rang the bell as he spoke, and the complacent personality of the servant who had admitted Renshaw promptly injected itself into the room.

"Jenks," said his master, "bring tea, and tell Miss Campbell when it is here. And by the way, Jenks—" He stopped the man on his way to the door, and turned to Renshaw. "Did you bring any luggage?"

"A bag. It is in the hall."

Campbell spoke to the butler:

"Take it up to the north room. Mr. Renshaw, who is my new secretary, will use that room—unless, after he has tried it, he prefers another."

Jenks left the room. He had not spoken, and he did not glance at Renshaw; but to the young man every line of his erect figure conveyed an august disapproval. In a few minutes he was back in stately association with a tea-wagon, which he rolled up to the fire. Simultaneously the door from the hall reopened and a girl came in.

She was young, not much more than twenty-two, he decided, at a glance, and very lovely. Her hair and her eyes were darker than his own, but soft and holding an unexpected expression of melancholy. Yet every line of her face and figure showed pride and spirit, and she walked with the gait of a young empress. She came directly to the side of the old man, kissed the top of his head with precision, and turned her unsmiling eyes on the visitor as he was presented.

"Verity, my dear," Campbell was saying, "this is Mr. Renshaw, who is going to look after my correspondence, and see that I get to bed at ten, and rule me generally with a rod of iron. But I warn you, Renshaw, that my granddaughter will hardly tolerate another tyrant in the house. To order me about is her pet privilege."

Renshaw, bowing silently before the girl, met for an instant the direct regard of her proud eyes, and in that instant realized that she did not like him. He accepted the discovery with indifference. The liking or disliking of others was unimportant. But, as he took the cup of tea she poured for him, he unexpectedly met the gaze of another pair of eyes—and the expression of these he could not so casually dismiss from his mind. They were the eyes of Jenks, the butler, and they held a message that was as clear as it was unpleasant—a message of intense and open antagonism.

While Campbell chatted with his granddaughter, tossing an occasional sentence to his new property, John Renshaw stared into the tea he was absently stirring. In his normal past many human beings liked him and a few had disliked him. But as far as he knew none had repudiated him at the first encounter so warmly and so obviously as Miss Verity Campbell and her butler had just done.

Why had they repudiated him?

Chapter II

Along Comes Verity.

"Mr. Renshaw!"

Tea was over and Jenks, again imperturbable, had trundled away the teawagon as tenderly as if it held the family's heir. As it was going, Campbell struggled out of his deep chair and, standing with his straight old back to the fire, addressed his new property with suave directness. Renshaw shied like a frightened horse, and none of the three pairs of eyes watching him missed the movement. Campbell experienced a sense of revolt, shot through with irritation against his old friend and physician.

"Confound it, how can this fellow be of any use to me, when he's nervous as a cat?" he reflected. "It's going to be an infernal nuisance to have to consider him as if he were a high-strung prima donna."

But, even as the thought went through his mind, the new secretary had recovered his poise and was on his feet, obviously ready for instructions.

"Probably you would like to go up to your room now," Campbell went on, in the suave voice that was so much younger than his years, "to unpack and rest after your journey. Jenks will show you the way. We dine at eight," he added, as the young man followed the butler, who had stopped at the sound of his name.

When the door closed upon the two, Campbell drew a long breath of relief.

"My dear," he fervently ejaculated, "I am beginning to think it will be almost worth while to have that fellow around for the sake of the frequent rapture of getting rid of him."

Verity's black eyebrows rose a trifle. "Why did you engage him, if you didn't want him?" she asked.

"Stanley wished him on me. The whole episode is an amazing piece of folly, and I am afraid I don't show up in it any better than Stanley and Renshaw," her grandfather confessed, with growing irritation. He described his interview with Renshaw, while Verity's expression, incredulous at first, changed to one of deepening interest and perplexity.

"You don't imagine there is something back of it?" she slowly suggested. "An effort to get into the house and—"

"No, no!" her grandfather testily interrupted. "The last two years of the man's time are fully accounted for. He has been in sanatoriums, poor chap. Besides, Stanley knows all about him."

"I wonder what happened to him?" Verity spoke almost under her breath, her imagination circling among various dark possibilities of which she had heard and read.

The old man shook his head.

"I haven't an idea. What I want to know is, what's going to happen to me under this absurd arrangement? I can't imagine why I let myself in for it. For a second or two I thought I saw a way of making him useful, but I don't believe it will work out—" He broke off. "I suppose the fellow has some magnetism," he ended.

"Not a particle." Verity spoke with conviction. "In fact, it's the other way around. There's something almost repellent in him, something a little—oh, what is the word? Well, something unhuman. He is unusually handsome, of course; there's even a certain nobility about his head and face. And yet, he's like a ghost. Yes, that's what I am trying to get at," she added, with quiet satisfaction. "He looks at us as the dead might look if they came back—as if he had passed through existences and experiences we could never understand and could not even dream of."

"No doubt he has," the old man conceded. "He affects me like a human draft. But we must not let our imaginations run away with us. If he is too depressing, we will get rid of him; I'll ship him off and make him useful somewhere else. He's got to do what I tell him and go where I send him." "And now let's forget the fellow and go on with that book you were reading."

Upstairs, in the chamber to which Campbell had sent him, Renshaw was doing some thinking of his own. His first impression was that it was oddly remote from other rooms. Only one additional door opened from the narrow corridor he had traversed. The second reflection, as Jenks turned a knob and stood back to let him enter his new quarters, was that the room was very large and extremely comfortable. Jenks touched an electric button and the shadowy room flashed into soft light which brought out the details of a mahogany bed in a far corner, facing the door, a high-boy, a low-boy, and a large built-in wardrobe. The room's north wall contained two windows, and through two additional windows, very wide and with built-in cushioned seats, he could look out on the front grounds of Tawno Ker and follow the maple-lined avenue leading to the highway. He was to have plenty of light and air, he reflected with content.

He went to a north window and, glancing out, found this first impression changing. There would be air, without doubt. But numerous oaks and maples crowded close to the house—so close, indeed, that an athlete such as Renshaw had once been could leap from a window into the wide-spreading branches of at least one venerable tree. The trees were rather unexpectedly thick in front, too, he discovered, and he was surprisingly far from the ground. He would be almost among the tree-tops if he leaned far out of the windows on the front side of his room.

Jenks threw open the door of a second room in which could be seen the outline of a shower apparatus and the nickel and porcelain fittings of a bathtub.

"The bathroom is very small, sir," the man apologetically explained, "and there's no window in it. It was made two years ago, out of a big closet. But you will be quite comfortable. And you will always find extra linen in the closet just outside your door, in the corridor. That closet is the mate to this one."

Renshaw returned to the bedroom and its blazing fire. He found that Jenks had lifted the heavy traveling-case to a small trunk-stand and was unfastening the straps.

"I'll attend to that, thanks," he said with a gesture of dismissal.

"Very well, sir." Jenks turned to go. "Shall I come back at half-past seven and help you dress?"

"No, thanks; I'll get along."

Jenks hesitated.

"Excuse me, sir, but Mr. Campbell regards it as a part of my duty to assist any gentlemen guests of his—and I shall be very glad to do anything I can, sir."

"That's all right, but I'm not a gentleman guest. I'm here to stay, and I prefer to look out for myself. So I won't trouble you."

Renshaw spoke pleasantly, but he was feeling puzzled. Standing by the fireplace with his elbow on the mantel and his detached glance drifting past the man's face, he wondered, without much interest, why the creature was so suddenly friendly. An hour ago he had been furiously resentful of the newcomer's presence. Now he seemed all eagerness and deference.

"Are you planning to have breakfast up here, sir?" he respectfully inquired.

"Good Lord, no!"

Renshaw spoke with sudden irritation. Why the devil was the fellow so persistent? Was it merely because he realized that the open betrayal of his antagonism had been unwise? Or was it—the thought stood stolidly at the entrance of the secretary's mind until he finally permitted the unwelcome visitor to enter—was it because Jenks knew that this newcomer was so infernally dependent on others that even at this moment every instinct in him was calling for assistance?

"What's your name?"

"Jenks, sir."

"Well, Jenks, there's exactly one thing you can do."

"Yes, sir." The man's tone was eager.

"Get out, please, and be quick about it!"

Jenks got out. His surface dignity was unimpaired, but the door closed on his exit with a temperamental snap.

Left alone, Renshaw dropped into the easy-chair before the exuberantly blazing fire, and rested his head against its padded back with a sigh of exhaustion. He was tired—tired to the soul; but from the darkness of that soul the hermit-thrush of hope sent out a solitary note. He had put through the Plan. He had won that little contest of wills with Jenks, and had given no outward sign of the effort it cost him. Now he would rest. Of course he ought to be unpacking, bathing, dressing for dinner. He would do all those things later. His present duty was to relax—to let the atmosphere of the old house sink into him.

How absurd he had been to imagine things about Jenks and Miss Campbell! Jenks was merely a spoiled servant, impersonally resenting any newcomer, and already contrite over his mistake and anxious to make amends.

As to the girl, that lovely girl with the jet-black hair and the proud and perfect mouth, she was afraid that he, Renshaw, was going to be a nuisance. The human beings in Tawno Ker, thrown together as closely as they were—the solitude of the place suddenly impressed him; surely it was miles from any neighbor!—those humans must form a close corporation. It was not to be wondered at that they should resent an intrusion like his.

A small log, blazing on the andirons, parted and dropped with a rattle and a shower of sparks. Renshaw did not hear it. The door opened an inch, and some one peered at him through the crack. He did not hear the sound it made as it opened and closed. He was in a condition of well-being, newfound and vastly comforting—at peace, relaxed, and at last drifting out on the blessed sea of sleep.

He was awakened by the sound of a gong, mellow but extremely penetrating, obviously a dinner or dressing gong designed to be heard throughout the big house. He sat up with a spectacular start and glanced at the clock on the mantel above him. It was half-past seven. He had slept uninterruptedly for more than an hour, an experience still novel enough to be gratifying. He had only thirty minutes in which to unpack, bathe and dress for dinner. As he cast a last glance in the mirror before he went downstairs he was mildly surprised by the agreeable normality of the being who looked back at him. The fellow seemed at least reconciled to life.

Evidently money does not interest the hero. Will he find anything in his job that will attract him?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Resented Insinuation

Jake Simpson's middle girl, Elsie, the one that's been brought up in the city, came down to Oak Holler the other Sunday to look over her Uncle Eb Simpson's farm and it seems that Eb got real het up over her visit and bundled her right off to town agin.

Eb ain't talkin' none, but somehow the story got out anyhow.

It seems Eb was showin' Elsie the farm critters and sech when they come on Eb's yaller cat and her litter of kittens.

"Oh, Uncle Eb, those kittens are all different colors," says Elsie. Eb draws himself up as straight as he can, him havin' the rheumatism, and almost chokes on his chaw of tobaccer.

"Well, young lady," he says. "Don't you try to cast no reflections. I'll say this much. Ma and me've tried to bring our cats up right."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Another Side of Success

Community Building

Beauty and "Homeyness" in Frame Construction

The building of a home should never be considered in the light of an investment. If you build for investment, build a house, but if you have in mind the building of a home, build it according to your ideals and incorporate all the contentment and happiness features into the general plan, in so far as they do not interfere with common-sense construction.

If you prefer frame construction and feel that it is more homey, then that is the material you should use. Lumber is one of the best possible materials to build a home. Its permanence is sufficient to satisfy every owner except one in the competing material business.

In the New England and Southern states we find homes which were built before the Revolutionary war still standing, sound and true and with no signs of depreciation.

Lumber imparts a particularly homey aspect to the house; it seems to take one back to their old home and childhood and brings out the best there is in one. It is conducive of happiness and contentment and, after all is said and done, that is all home is for, anyway.

On the silver screen a woman was bemoaning her fate at not having found happiness and was reminded that she was promised success, not happiness, and the same may be true of a house. It may be a house, not a home.

Build of frame if you wish this type of construction; keep it well painted and it will last as long as you can wish.—Boston Herald.

Fighting for Ideals in City Managership

A municipal duel is under way in cities big and little of the country. The fight is between two ideas—an old idea and a new idea, R. L. Duffus states, in the New York Times. The new and challenging idea is the city manager form of municipal government. In the last notable encounter between the two systems, in the recent election, the city manager form won a victory, and another big city—Cincinnati—is added to the list of those municipalities, now more than 300, which have adopted the idea. Five million citizens are now under the city manager form of government.

What will the outcome be? No man may yet say. Will some one of the great cities of the country try the new system?

Among the cities and towns now under this plan, in addition to Cincinnati, are Cleveland, Dayton, Pasadena, San Diego, Colorado Springs, Miami, Wichita, Portland, Maine; Grand Rapids, Niagara Falls, Springfield, Ohio; Knoxville, Beaumont, Texas; Norfolk, Va.; Charleston, Clarksburg and Wheeling, W. Va., and Auburn, Newburgh, Sherrill, Watertown and Watervliet, N. Y. Only four cities which adopted the plan by popular vote have ever discarded it.

For Expert City Planning

Charles H. Cheney, city planner of Los Angeles, suggested as a remedy for the "ugliness and jumbled appearance of most of our American cities" the establishment of competent committees or art juries to pass upon all designs for structures and suppress those not up to a reasonable standard of attractiveness.

Regional planning as a thing of intercommunity interest of metropolitan unity was brought out as a successful actuality in the vast growth of Los Angeles during the past ten years by Hugh R. Poneroy, secretary and member of the Los Angeles planning commission.

In mentioning the problem of regional transportation, Mr. Pomeroy reported "a greater spirit of co-operation and tolerant understanding, than ever before" on part of government agencies, civic bodies and railroads.

Artistic Brick

Structurally, brick is the soundest possible material. In the first place, the size and form of brick make them an easy material to handle and adaptable to the master mason's skillful craftsmanship. He builds them one by one into a solid wall fabric, strong and durable. Then the brick themselves, hardened and matured in fire, submit to the heaviest pressures and resist both the attacks of flame and the corrosions of time. Brick may well be called an everlasting material, because they neither burn nor decay. Their history affords sufficient testimony, and the scene of any conflagration shows the brick walls and chimneys as solemn witnesses of their enduring strength.

National Capital's Beauty

True beauty combined with utility defies time and forms a basis of real estate values. Washington's wide streets and sensible building regulations prevent any part of the city from choking to death with congestion. Moreover, those wide streets and numerous little squares and circles which are such an attractive adornment are also valuable checks to the spread of fire and are contributors to health in the form of fresh air.

China's Cotton Industry

China, a land of many obsolete industrial activities, has one industry that is modern in almost every detail. It is cotton which is rapidly developing into a major industry. It has much cheap labor, including that of children, of course, but its machinery and methods are up to date. Its greatest weakness is in the scientific management of the factories, but this is being overcome by the bringing in of foreign experts.

White Swans Come Back

Jack Miner's bird sanctuary at Kingston, Ont., was the calling place recently of a flock of about 200 native white swans on their way to the South for the winter. White swans in their wild state were almost extinct in Canada a few years ago. Lately, however, numbers of them have been visiting the sanctuary a part of them on their way North in the spring, and the rest stop on their way down South.

Heaven itself isn't exclusive enough for some people.

Measuring Light's Velocity

The velocity of light may be measured in the laboratory by the following method: A cogged wheel is so mounted that a ray of light passes between two of the teeth and is reflected back from a mirror. Slight as is the fraction of a second which light takes to travel the distance, it is possible to give such speed to the wheel that the next tooth catches the ray of light on its return and cuts it off. The speed is increased still further until the ray of light returns to the eye of the observer through the notch next to the one by which it had passed to the mirror. The speed of the wheel being known, it is thus possible to determine the velocity of light.

MORNING FROCKS FOR SPRING; NEW NECKWEAR IS IMPORTANT

PROPHECIES of coming styles for spring are not a matter of words—they appear in the collections made ready for merchants and for tourists who go South in search of spring weather. In the great markets of the country and in the parade of fashion at famous resorts, new styles are in review, and many of them are destined to appear later in all parts of these United States. However, no one cares to make selection of important summer frocks until all the new things are on display, but simple morning or day dresses may be made ready now, so that there will be no rush or worry when warm days call us out of doors.

Stylists tell us that plain, high colored linens—in soft reds, buff, blue and light green, henna and light brown—skillfully made and new shades appear in plain materials. Fullness at the sides and front, panels and aprons, achieved by plaits and shirrings, and tucking at the hips, promise fuller skirts which are flared by varied means, but all from a low waistline or below the knees.

From present indications neckwear is increasing in importance and coming in for even more attention than it has just now. So long as practical day dresses remain simple and almost unadorned they must look to small finishing touches and accessories, to lift them above the level of the commonplace. The new frocks presented recently for spring, in tailored and informal types, are as simple as those that have been so successful for winter, but they reveal a greater variety in necklines and emphasize neck finishings. The scarf, or tie, or jabot attached vary the ever present collar treatment, although this remains by far the most important neck finish.

Of Navy Blue Charmeen.

Among made-up neckpieces, collar and cuff sets and scarfs or ties, the shops are showing neckwear by the yard, ready to be converted into any sort of pieces. Two examples of this attractive yardage are pictured here—one in net and lace and one in plaid and plain ribbon. Both are plaited—the net frill finished with lace insertion and narrow edging at the top and rows of colored stitching as a border. In the ribbon yardage a narrow plain ribbon is joined to plaid taffeta with a tiny gold braid. Two rows of it are set on a soft net foundation, bound on one edge with the narrower ribbon, to form collar and cuffs. The collar is finished with a ribbon tie.

Rejuvenated by Neckwear.

Last year's straightline frocks cannot be told from this year's when they are brought up-to-the-minute in style by new neckwear, and a few changes of neckwear will keep them always fresh and interesting.

Whoever has treasured fine, old-fashioned round collars, of precious lace or embroidery, has the means at hand for adding a touch of beauty and dignity to the simplest dress that will lend it the character of elegance.

Are already in demand for morning dresses and that certain heavy cotton weaves in the same colors will be used. That white crepe de chine and white wash silks with colored stripes are as sure of welcome as the sunshine is, and that, in tailored versions of the daytime frock, navy blue is coming back—and coming strong. That for all these frocks the simple, straightline silhouette remains undisturbed as the favorite of fashion and that collars and cuffs of crepe de chine, embroidered batiste or other sheer fabrics, plain and striped linens and laces are always a part of the play. They say these frocks may or may not be belted but that many of them have leather belts worn at a low waistline, or belts made of the material of the dress. With the striped wash silk, white crepe de chine collar and cuffs and narrow white kid belts, make a perfect finish. Pearl buttons figure also in the composition of tub frocks.

A daytime dress that may be worn now and later, is shown in the picture. It is made of navy blue charmeen, and is entirely plain except for two practical pockets. The red leather belt is much wider than the average and the model has adjusted it at a higher line than that sponsored by present modes. There is very little likelihood that the waistline will be any higher than it is now.

For afternoon "frocks," combinations of plain and printed fabrics are very

KLEMME DROPS GAME TO SWALEDALE QUINTET

BEATEN BY A SCORE OF 12-15

KLEMME SHOWS GOOD FORM IN LAST HALF; TOO SLOW IN FIRST HALF

Hayfield Plays Klemme Here Friday Night; Doubleheader

The Boys' Basket Ball team journeyed to Swaledale last Friday night and journeyed back again—with the small end of the score. The way our boys played the first half was a crime. They seemed dead on their feet and didn't seem to realize they were playing basket ball. None of the boys played up to form, missing good shots and short passes. Swaledale did some fair playing and made some lucky shots. Before our team knew it Swaledale had 5 goals and 2 shots from the foul line chalked up ao their credit. They presented a stubborn five man defense which our boys were slow in breaking up. The only shots Klemme made during the entire half was a gratis shot by Turgasen.

The second half was entirely different. Our boys seemed to have more pep, our defense tightened down and Lemke jumped in wiah a "hot wrist" and scored nine points. Swaledale was unable to make any more field goals, but had to be satisied with three foul shots. They played for time, putaing in a substitute and then puling him out, then putting him in again. It was a nice trick and used up a lot of valuable time. For the locals Lemke was probably star man, although F. Gibbs did his bit and Turgasen showed up well in the short time he played.

Lineup and Summary:

Klemme 12		Swaledale 15

RED CLOVER IS HIGH PRICED

May Pay Farmers to Seed Alsike Instad—Alsike-Timothy Mixture is Recommended

The extreme scarcity and high price of red clover seed is confronting the Iowa farmer with a perplexing problem. Iowa needs more clover and legumes and any condition which threatens to reduce Iowa's seedings of clover is serious, says E. S. Dyas, extension specialist, Iowa State College.

To add to the difficulty, large quantities of inferior imported seed have been put on the market and there is no way of distinguishing home grown seed from the imported Red Clover seed from Italy, France and Chili have given very poor results at the Iowa Experiment Station at Ames. From a half to three-fourths of the plants from this seed winter killed and in comparison to home grown seeds yielded less than half as much hay per acre.

Fortunately, alsike clover seed is selling at a price only a litte more than half the price of red cloverand on account of the small size of the seed the rate of seeding need be only about half that of red clover in order to get a good stand. Therefore a mixture of three pounds of red clover and three pounds of alsike clover per acre is fairly economical and will give good results. Alsike clover is especially adapted to soils that are a little too acid or not sufficiently well drained for red clover. Soil in this condition can profitably be seeded to a mixture of four pounds of alsike and one pound of timothy per acre. The timothy will hold the alsike from lodging and make the hay easier to cut and handle. The sowing of large proportions of timothy in the seeding is to be discouraged on account of the fact that timothy, unlike the clovers, is not a soil builder and the hay does not have the high feeding value of clover hay.

Where the soil is not acid one or two pounds of alfalfa seed may bein cludet in the seeding mixture with success. This is a good way to get alfalfa well established on ground that is new to the crop and providing the soil is suitable to alfalfa growing, it will produce a good mixture of hay the next year after seeding.

VOTE OF THE PEOPLE NECESSARY BEFORE ROAD BONDS CAN BE ISSUED

Des Moines, Ia. Jan. 27— A favorable vote of the people of the state will be necessary before any bonds for road improvement work are issued in Iowa.

Senator B. J. Horchem, of Dubuque, a member of the highways committee in the upper house of the 41st General Assembly, now in session here ,emphasized that point today to clear up any misunderstanling existing in the state in regard to the proposed $85,000,000 good roads bond issue which will come before this session of the Legislature.

"Under the Constitution, the Legislature has no power to order such an issue of bonds,' 'Senator Horchem explained.

"However, the General Assembly has authority to submit such a bond issue proposition to a vote of the people at the next general election in November 1926, for acceptance or rejectiin. It is this question of submission that seems likely to cause a spirited legislature scrap in the coming weeks.

"All this session of the Legislature can do is to decide whether or not the citizens of Iowa shall be given an opportunity to vote 'yes' or 'no' on the proposed bond issue. There need be no fear in any quarter that the Legislature itself will vote a bond issue upon the people. That can't be done, under our constitution. Acceptance or rejection of the bond is solely and entirely the peregative of the people themselves."

At this time ,there is distinct cleavage among members of the Legislature in regard to submitting the bond issue proposal to popular vote in 1926.

Those opposing such submission seem inclined to the belief that the people should be "protected from themselves", that they are not competetnt to pass judgmnt upon the question whether it is wise or unwise to issue bonds for road improvment work.

Those in favor of submission of the bond issue to popular vote agree with the ex-Governor N. E. Kendall who, in his farewell message to the Legislature declared that the bond plan has the merit of allowing those "who pay the frieght' 'to vote their opinion for or gainst the proposition.

Kendall declared that our republican form of government is based on the principal of giving the people the right to express their approval or disapproval of such issues, and he pointed out to the Legislature that citizens of Iowa can be "trusted implicitly" to decide the the question of issuing bonds for road improvement work, after having had two years in which to study the proposition.

"If there are those who favor a gasoline tax enacted by the General Assembly with out any mandate whatever, but who yet oppose a referendum of the bond issue to the people themselves who are competetnt to determine it, there is difficulty in undrstanding the intellectual process by which they arrive at such an anomalous conclusion," Governor Kendall aptly in that part of his message dealing with Iowa's roads problems, stated.

Governor Hamill, our present governor, also suggested that we should give the matter careful and thoughtful consideration.

."Senator Horchem continued: "We cannot keep the cake and eat it. We cannot have better roads without paying for them. But may we not save by invesing? May not the saving on wear and tear, the loss of time, and the advantages offered be more profitable and beneficial to all?

"Should we not be open minded and study the question from all angles? 'Should we permit a preconceived prejudice to keep us from informing ourselves on this important program "

THE AVERAGE FARMER'S INCOME IN HANCOCK CO. IS $3,400.00

The average Hancock coonty farmer's income in 1924 was $3400 according to the Blue Valley Creamry Institute. This estimate, based on the most acchrate available data covers the yield, acreage and animal duction on farms in this section of Iowa.

This is the best indication yet that the state's agricultural is again headed toward prosperity, say the Institute. 1919, one of the two peak years in the purchasing power of the American farmer, witnessed an income of $2,985 per farm in the state. The average income per Iowa farm for the past season's production will run up to approximately $2,900.

An outstanding fact brought out in the studies of last year's farm records is the steady rise in theperacre value of the leading U. S. crops. The value per acre for the country as a whole in 1921 was only $14.45 This jumped to $21.52 in 1923, and in 1924 it amounted to practically $24.00. Improved methods advocated by the state college of agriculture was a big factor in making this gain and in more efficient product tion per cow. sow and hen animal u nit lies further increases in the set profits of Iowa farms, concludes the Institute.

The other night about mid night our phone rang, so we hopped out of a nice warm bed, stepped on a carpet tack, skinned our shin on a chair that was in the way and finally reached the phone and said "Hello", This is what we got: "What is a printers' measure in two letters beginning with e." We said Oh h——l and the nut says "what was that." We said "yes, hell box,' and hung up the receiver.—Algona Republican.

HANCOCK COUNTY FAIR ASSOCIATION MEETS

County Fair to Be Held on September 22, 23, 24, 25.

It isn't all roses running a county fair. The Chautauqua passed out of Britt because no one was sufficiently interested to bolster it up and keep it going but the fair has a line of boosters that will not down. The meeting held Saturday afternoon brought out about thirty men, most of them farmers who see the benefit of an agricultural exhibition and are willing to carry on in spite of great difficulties.

The old board of directors was re-elected. They are J. M. Townsend, John heets, Antony Baker, E. A. Fisher, M. S. Burgitt, Ren Smith, Frank Kopacek, R. A. Wing and Wil liam Nail. These men will meet the middle of February and set the ball to rolling.

Dates were set for the 1925 fair about a month later than the fairs have been held the past years with th idea of getting away from the threshing season. The dates will be September 22, 23, 24, and 25.

There was a lively discussion on the question of entertainment. M. S. Burgitt and Antony Baker were jiin ed by a few as championing the idea of eliminating the horse races. J. C. Sheets and L. T. Nutty were joined by an equal number in their desire to insist on retaining the horse race program. It was decided to feel out the public sentiment in the matter and to that end you can preform a serv'ce by airing your opinions to some of the directors.

One thing is certain it costs a lot of money to get attractions that will please the public (you and I) and if the fair is going to pay out the crows most be either doubled or the expense cut in two. Which will it be?—Britt News-Tribune.

HANCOCK COUNTY TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

The Annual Teachers ' Institute will be held in Britt, Thursday and Friday, February 12th and 13th.

In order to secure the best talent available at the lest possible expense, Hancock and Winnebago counties will hold their institutes on the sme dates, using the same speakers.

DEAL WAS CLOSED MONDAY

P. M. WILSON IS NEW OWNER OF DRUG BUSINESS IN THIS CITY

G. G. Seney Has Been A Klemme Business Man For A Year

An important business deal was closed here Saturday when G. G. Seney sold his drug store business in Klemme to Mr. P. M. Wilson, of Vinton, Iowa, who took charge of the business Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Seney have been in the drug business here for about a year, having come to Klemme a few weeks after former druggist E. S. D. Kahrs moved to Ventura. Since then they have enjoyed a good business and brought their stock of drugs and sundries up to a high standard. Mr. Wilson is taking over a going business and one of the best in our little city.

Mr. and Mrs. Seney have made a large number of friends here during their stay in Klemme, who will regret their moving away. As yet, they are undecided as to what their future course of pursuit will be. In all probabilities they will not remain in Klemme but a short time. However, we wish them success wherever they may go and whatever they decide to do.

Mr. Wilson, the new proprietor of the drug store is a man of wide experience. He comes here from Vinton, Iowa, where he has been connected with the Rexall Store there for the past five years. Prior to that time he was in the drug business at Clarion. He appears to be a wide awake man and is pleasant to meet. Mrs. Wilson and their daughter, will move to Klemme in a few weeks.

The business men of Klemme welcome the Wilson family into their business circle, and we wish them prosperity and happiness here.

COOLIDGE TO ASK FRANCE TO PAY

Backs Senator Borah on Debt—Will Make Demands After March 4.

Washington. — President Coolidge stands behind the demand of Senator Borah that France pay its $4,000,000,000 debt to the United States, it was learned at the White House. It is indicated that Washington officials are entirely weary of the cautious feelers of France toward a moratorium or outright cancellation.

It is believed that the President will instruct the debt commission to communicate with France officially and individually, as to her intent.

Official Washington's principal topic was the recent development in the situation. Senator Bruce of Maryland replied to the speech of Senator Borah, flaying the French attitude toward France's obligations in America. Senator Dill followed Senator Bruce in the same tenor: That, although France should be made to pay, she should be allowed every consideration because of her aid to the American colonies during the Revolution.

There is no doubt, however, that the position of Senator Borah is the position of the administration. It is believed that he apprised the President of his intention to speak on the matter during the White House conference Wednesday night.

It is believed almost certain that the debt commission, perhaps through Ambassador Herrick, will be instructed to make urgent representations to the French government not long after the inauguration ceremonies on March 4.

Washington. — Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, chairman of the foreign relations committee, warned the senate and the American people France is planning to repudiate her $4,000,000,000 war debt to the United States.

Replying to the speech in the French chamber of deputies by Deputy Marin, Senator Borah said no one could read that debate or the French press without concluding that "acquittal" of the debt is now the issue, "that no part of it is to be settled, that no part of it is to be paid."

"Of course, that great people can take the position and repudiate their obligation in that way," he added, "but if they choose to do so, the truth of history ought to carry the actual facts in regard to the debt and the conditions and circumstances surrounding the settlement.

"I do not know whether it is exactly just to say that we are now discussing the question of absolute repudiation, but in view of the fact that for five years there has been no offer of settlement; no payment of principal and no payment of interest; in view of the further fact that no specific proposition for settlement has ever been made, that it is not apparently now intended, as the press of France and as the speakers upon behalf of those people now indicate, I assume that that is the real problem before us."

Quoting at length from Marin's address, in the course of which the French deputy said it would be iniquitous for the United States to collect its debt from France, Senator Borah asserted there was no justification for the efforts made to place the United States in the position of an "exacting creditor."

Chauffeur Who Helped Bergdoll Flee Gives Up

Philadelphia. — Eugene Stecher, chauffeur and companion of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, millionaire draft evader, surrendered to the United States district attorney here.

Stecher, who is alleged to have aided Bergdoll in his escape from the United States, was placed under arrest on indictments charging conspiracy and harboring a fugitive, and was held on $10,000 bail.

Unable to obtain the bond, he was locked up in the county prison.

Asserting that he had left Bergdoll in Germany, Stecher said that he had returned to this country by way of Holland, England and Canada, and that only Mrs. Emma Bergdoll, mother of Grover, was aware of his presence here.

U. S. DRY AGENTS ACCUSE SENATOR

Edwards Charged With Being Involved in Liquor.

Jersey City, N. J.—A charge that United States Senator Edward I. Edwards of New Jersey was the backer of ten Weehawken police and two civilians now being tried for conspiracy to violate the prohibition law was made. Two agents of the Treasury department, Charles I. Hurlbut and Lionel Wilson, made the charge in their testimony.

Wilson, the first witness, said that not only had William Griffin, one of the defendants in the case and alleged master mind of the conspiracy, told him that Senator Edwards was his backer, but that Edwards had accepted and held in escrow $3,800 which he was to have delivered to Griffin when the latter delivered 100 cases of what Edwards assured them would be "good stuff."

Prosecuting Attorney John Milton of Hudson county indicated that the charges of the federal officers would be presented to the grand jury.

When communicated with in Washington, Edwards said he would answer the charges "at the proper time."

The federal agents admitted that there had been no sale or delivery, however, and that Senator Edwards had returned the money to them after they said Griffin had become suspicious.

Paris Chamber of Deputies in Riot Over Debt to U. S.

Paris.—The chamber of deputies was thrown into a 25-minute uproar that faced suspension of the session after Deputy Desjardins had criticized bitterly the chamber for refusing to order the posting of Deputy Marin's speech on the interallied debts. It was the most disorderly scene ever before witnessed in the chamber.

Deputy Desjardins kept shouting that the governmental majority was afraid to indorse Marin's thory of justice in dealing with the interallied debts because of the "deplorable effect it had on the American senate."

After President Painleve had jammed his hat on his head as a signal that the session was suspended, the deputies continued thumping the desks, gesticulating and shouting. They quieted later and the session was resumed, Premier Herriot taking the rostrum.

Attacks Bill Which Would Jail Dry Law Violators

Washington.—The widely advertised Stalker bill, increasing the penalties for violation of the Volstead act and recently favorably reported to the house by the judiciary committee, was the subject of a scathing denunciation by Congressman Graham (Rep.) of Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee, together with Representative Dominick (Dem.) of South Carolina.

Contradicting denials of prohibition leaders, Mr. Graham said the bill made jail sentences, in addition to fines, mandatory in every instance, even in those of first offenders.

HUSBAND AIDS GOV. FERGUSON

New Texas Executive Urges Tax on Tobacco to Provide School Funds.

Austin, Texas.—"Jim, who signed that application?"

It was a query from the woman governor, Mrs. Miriam H. Ferguson, to her husband, who sat a few feet from her in the governor's office. It was "Ma" Ferguson's first day on the job. Mr. Ferguson once occupied the office himself. He was impeached, tried by the senate, ousted, and his right to hold public office in Texas forfeited.

As Mrs. Ferguson began her duties, a resolution was introduced into the state senate to annul the impeachment judgment of 1917 and restore Mr. Ferguson to eligibility to office.

As Mrs. Ferguson waited Jim read the document in silence.

It was a pardon application for Sylvester Montalbano of Houston, serving a sentence for murder. Finally he spoke:

"Well, I see the names of two newspaper men on it, so it can't amount to much.

"I recommend, governor, that this man be granted a 60-day extension of his furlough to give him time to make his crops. In that time the board of pardons can decide what to do."

Then, turning to the newspaper men, he said:

"We grant a 60-day extension."

Mr. Ferguson called his wife "Governor." Mrs. Ferguson called her husband "Jim." Most of the pronouncements were in the first person plural, "we."

The newspaper men found the first woman governor leaning back in her swivel chair with her hands resting on top of her head, as though a bit tired after the fatiguing night of social events that put the finishing touches on her inaugural day.

Governor Ferguson's message to the legislature produced a ripple of applause when it was read in the senate, but caused no other pause in the consideration of senate business.

When her suggestion was made that a tax on cigars and cigarettes would produce $4,000,000 annually for the schools the chamber was wreathed in tobacco smoke. The face of each senator was grave and impassive.

Likewise suggestions that the state ranger force be reorganized, cattle tick eradication be continued on a slow but progressive basis, and that a state highway policy be adopted which would provide "good roads from the farm to the mill," evoked no demonstration.

Treaty Gives Japan Concessions in Russia

Peking.—Soviet Russia was formally recognized by Japan here when a recognition treaty was signed by M. Yoshizawa, Japanese minister to Peking, acting for Japan, and Mr. Karakhan, Soviet ambassador in the Far East, who represented the Moscow government.

Japan, it is said, received the right to exploit half the vast Saghalin island coal and oil deposits under a 50-year lease, and acquires secret concessions on the Russian mainland, as well as rights to exploit the timber lands of Siberia.

Other provisions of the treaty are as follows:

All Russo-Japanese treaties negotiated before 1917 are canceled except the treaty of Portsmouth, which ended the Russo-Japanese war.

Mutual concessions to the nationals of one country residing in the other, trade privileges to be granted to such individuals.

Tariff on Agricultural Products Asked by Hoover

Washington.—A tariff on agricultural products to prevent importation of cheap foodstuffs and the raising of living standards for the nation to increase per capita consumption were suggested as solutions for the farmer's problem by Secretary of Commerce Hoover in a speech before the President's agricultural committee. This situation led the commerce secretary to say:

"The American farmer will never be upon a stable basis so long as he is dependent, on the one side, on competition with cheap foreign labor, and, on the other, with lowered standards of living in the export market."

Holds Further Tax Cut Is Not Practical Until '26

Washington.—A review of the treasury situation has convinced treasury officials that any further tax reduction will not be practical before 1926. There is no opportunity for any tax legislation during the present session of congress, and Secretary Mellon would oppose legislation at this time. He desires to study the effect of the full operation of the present law before making changes, and no percentage reduction on incomes or other similar action by resolution will be approved by administration officials.

Officials of the league said, however, that they hoped in the meanwhile to induce her to rescind her decision and resume membership.

LEGISLATORS HAVE A BIG PROGRAM

If the Messages of Kendall and Hammill are Heeded.

With the exception of the proposed road bond issue and the gasoline tax, the general assembly has laid out for it a definite legislative program.

Included in the proposals advocated by both executives are these:

A law providing a tax on incomes to replace the general property tax as a means of providing the state's revenue.

Banking Reform.

Banking reforms, principally the elimination of preference to public funds in the liquidation of a bank's assets.

Ratification of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution and adoption of the Iowa child welfare commission's program for dependent, neglected and subnormal children.

A program of economy in expenditures and increased efficiency in governmental bureaus.

Remodeling of the state road laws to make them conform with federal requirements in order that federal road aid may be received.

Adherence to Budget.

Strict adherence to the budget law and to the appropriation bill of the budget director.

The difference of opinion held by the former executive and the new governor on the proposed bond issue may serve to divide sentiment in the legislature. It is generally believed, however, that a gasoline tax, but no road bond issue program is favorably regarded by most of the members.

FARM BODY FOR GASOLINE TAX.

The Iowa Farm Bureau federation passed resolutions at its convention favoring the passage by the Iowa general assembly of a gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon to be used for good roads. The resolutions provided that this tax should replace the present property tax for road improvement. Resolutions opposing the proposed $85,000,000 bond issue and favoring the child labor amendment were passed almost unanimously. Any increase in postal rates was opposed by the organization. This action favoring the gas tax but denouncing the bonding proposal has had a far-reaching effect upon the sentiment in the assembly.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED ATTENDED

John Hammill was inaugurated as Iowa's twenty-fourth governor in the presence of an audience of 1,500 legislators, political leaders and visitors who gathered from every part of the state to witness the installation ceremonies. More than 5,000 persons passed along the receiving line at the governor's reception which preceded the annual inaugural ball, the most brilliant social occasion of official Iowa.

PAY AS YOU GO.

Adoption of a strictly "pay as you go" policy in all state affairs involving the expenditure of public money was advocated by Gov. John Hammill in his inaugural address delivered in the house.

BANK BILL CERTAIN.

One of the first bills will provide for the repeal of the law which has made deposits of public money in banks preferred over the deposits of individuals when banks fail.

PROBABLY NOT.

Should the legislature vote to refer the bond matter to the electorate, Governor Hammill probably would not exercise the veto, it was indicated.

MANY RECRUITS.

Of the 158 members of the general assembly, sixty-eight are recruits who have seen no previous experience in the legislature.

Women of the American Legion auxiliary are organizing to give relief to soldiers at the state hospital at Cherokee.

After they get everyone educated for white collar jobs, who is going to make the white collars?" asks the Boone-News Republican.

The year 1924 will go down in the economic annals of Iowa as one of definite although measured progress toward so-called normalcy.

Bank clearings in Des Moines are practically the same as in 1923 but an average gain the past few weeks of some 5 per cent each week presages a new record in 1925.

A wild and wooly wild west rodeo in which 200 or more cowboys and performers will take part, will be staged in Des Moines early in June under the auspices of Argonne post, American Legion.

Several new industries are either moving to Des Moines or launching operations at this time and large national concerns are looking to Iowa more and more for distribution in this great Trans-Mississippi territory.

Iowa shippers have been notified of the opening in the near future of a new deep water port at Corpus Christi, Aexas. The port is being built under government supervision at a cost of $4,320,000.

The fellow who reports the Lincoln Highway rough from Clinton to Council Bluffs forgets that there are forty miles of paving out of Clinton that never get rough.

The movements for a municipal coliseum for Dubuque, it is promised, will acquire definite headway within the next few days, as the "committee of 50" begins its work.

Well to Provide Now for Future of City

American cities, with their present rapid growth and the increasing demand for homes away from the crowded section, are constantly breaking over their boundary lines and overflowing into new territory. The march of an urban population into the region still under the township authority brings some large problems. Haphazard development of the outlying territories, plots laid out without reference to the way in which they conform to the city's plan of arterial streets, residence lots parceled out far from water and sewer connections, hampering of the semi-urban territory by legal restrictions as to township expenditure framed to meet the needs of a purely rural township, these are some of the growing pains of suburban territories.

The creation of metropolitan areas, or districts, is the device which modern cities have evolved to aid in the adjustment of these difficulties. The National Association of Real Estate Boards will undertake a study of how far American cities have devised successful plans for the development of suburban territories through metropolitan areas and will hold a national round-table discussion of subdividers looking to the encouragement of workable plans and toward the spread of such methods of subdivision development as will make for sound and healthy city growth.

Start Drive to Clean Up City's Back Yard

"Let's clean up our back yard."

That's the cry of the industrial development committee of the Cleveland Real Estate board which is planning a campaign which has for its purpose the "sprucing up" of those sections of industrial plants visible to the casual passer-through on the railroads.

The cleanup movement offers various advantages. First, the chance to do some very effective advertising for itself by presenting a good appearance to those passing through on trains. Second, it advertises Cleveland.

In some cities where such a movement has been undertaken, attractive planting along the right-of-way has been made a part of the campaign.

The American Railway Development association has passed a resolution pledging its co-operation in the realtor movement for spruce and business-like appearance in industrial areas. Individual railroads are cooperating through their development departments.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Must Look to Future

I've always believed that city planning was unworthy of the name unless it provided for the future of the city in question and therefore really came under the heading of regional planning, writes Myron H. West, president of the American Park Builders.

The first city to take advantage of the new law regarding the sections outside municipalities was Decatur, which caused to be prepared a comprehensive city and regional plan providing for the plotting of 16,000 acres in addition to the 4,000 acres contained within the city limits. This extended area will take off an added population of 100,000.

I believe that the very foundation of city planning lies in comprehensive zoning and in street control, as made possible under the recent Illinois act.

Citizens Must Be Alert

Concern with the problem of city government is not confined to students of municipal affairs. It is shared by the people of the cities. Those who must bear the burden of city government in the payment of taxes are beginning to realize their chief hope for the future lies in more economical and efficient administration of their affairs. It would be a wholesome change if there should come the realization, too, that whatever the system of government, a persistent and alert public interest in its administration is necessary to effective results.—Exchange.

Group Aids Beauty

As a general rule, more beauty and dignity is the result of planting a group of one kind of tree instead of mixing them. I am not here speaking about forest or woodland planting, but about planting along our highways. Where the adjacent landscape is not interesting, the roadside picture would be enhanced by a promiscuous planting of trees, not in a formal line, but in a scattered way, so that you meet many trunks in place for a lane of trees, shutting off the view of the adjoining country.—Exchange.

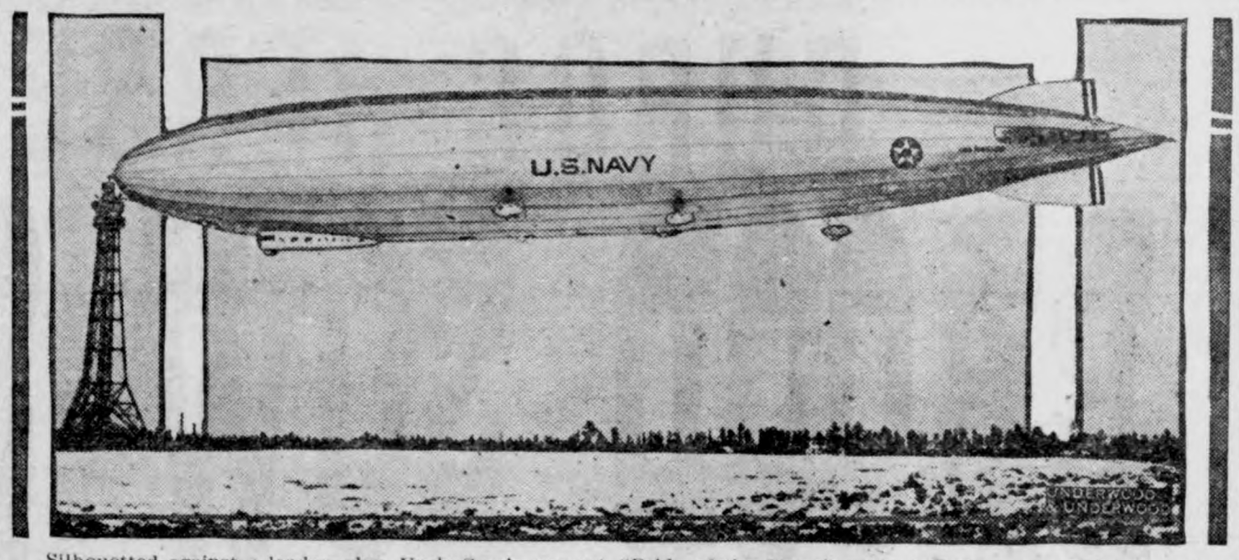
Lawn's Proper Setting

Concerning borders that add to the appearance of the lawn, Successful Farming says: "A hardy border of shrubs and perennial plants gives a beautiful setting to a well-kept lawn, and in this border flowers may be had in bloom the entire summer by a judicious selection. Hardy bulbs may be had in bloom with the very earliest shrubbery and these will be followed by the peonies, lilies, and summer flowering bulbs and perennials, while fall blooming plants carry on until frost.

All Sorts of Winter Sports Flourish in Quebec

In the matter of winter sports Quebec is perhaps unrivalled on this side of the Atlantic, and it draws thousands of visitors from the United States as well as from Canada. The illustration shows the rink of the Chateau Frontenac during a tug of war between gentlemen and ladies.

Los Angeles Moored to Her Mast at Lakehurst



Silhouetted against a leaden sky, Uncle Sam's newest "Pride of the Navy" moored to the mast at the Lakehurst naval air station for the first time. The name "Los Angeles" may be discerned beneath the port lateral fin of the great dirigible. On January 24 the Los Angeles ascended with a party of scientific men of the naval observatory at Washington to photograph and get other important data on the eclipse of the sun.

Little Boy Saved by His Pet Dog

Here are three-year-old Jack Stowell of Chicago and his dog Beauty, to whom he owes his life. Jack, while playing in the kitchen of his home lit a match and dropped it into a waste paper basket, starting a big fire. Beauty dashed through the house barking frantically until help came and the flames were extinguished.

Death Threats for These Girls

Anna Brooks (left) and Elizabeth Massey (right) are being protected by police guards at their homes in Philadelphia, since Miss Brooks received letters threatening her with death if she furnishes information to the police regarding the robbery they saw. Miss Brooks and Miss Massey were eye-witnesses to the holdup of two messengers of the Bank & Trust company of West Philadelphia, who were robbed of a satchel containing $21,000.

TASHI LAMA VANISHES

Photographic copy of painting, by Sviatoelaw Roerich, a noted Russian artist who has just come to New York from Tibet, of the Tashi Lama, spiritual head of the Tibetan people, whose mysterious disappearance recently caused a sensation in the East. This is the first time a Tashi Lama has disappeared and there is no satisfactory explanation of the affair, according to Mr. Roerich, who adds that Tibetans believe it is the precursor of great changes.

LEGION MEMBERSHIP

EX-GOVERNOR WILLIAM E. GLASSCOCK, of West Virginia, in a communication to Legion officials of Morgantown endorsing American Legion week there, said of the Legion:

"I consider it the highest privilege accorded any young American to belong to the American Legion. It is an honor to be eligible to membership in this organization of service men. I have never been able to understand why any young man who is entitled to membership is not an active member of some post of the Legion. I am sure that there are many of us who are not eligible to membership who would esteem it a high honor to be a member of the Legion. The good you can do as an organization can hardly be estimated and it seems to me that every ex-service man owes it to himself and his comrades, and especially his disabled and more unfortunate comrades, to place himself in the best possible position for service. But he cannot occupy that position unless and until he unites with his comrades in a strong virile organization dedicated to the noble purposes promulgated by the American Legion and for which it exists."

LEGION MEMBER, 71, MADE GOOD RECORD

Robert Thomas Wilson, seventy-one, member of Grand Forks post of the Legion, North Dakota, in addition to being one of the oldest active Legion members, has a service record which bears scrutiny.

Mr. Wilson was sent to France early in 1917 in charge of a shipload of horses bought by the allies and, though his passports did not permit him to remain in France, he was determined to see something of the war. After many narrow escapes from the French police he finally arrived at the front line and "got into it," being sworn into the service on the front line on July 2, 1917. Commissioned as a first lieutenant, he was assigned to duty with the Second pioneer engineers, with the duty of artillery observer.

On several occasions Wilson acted as range finder for the One Hundred Fifty-first field artillery, in which his two sons were serving. He did not know, or find out, that his sons were in service in his vicinity until after the war.

He was wounded on several occasions, but at the present time is hale and hearty for a man of his age, with no visible marks of the war except a missing forefinger which was torn away by an explosion of shrapnel.

Colorado and Wyoming in Contest With Utah

The department of Utah, American Legion, began recently a five months' membership campaign in competition with the departments of Colorado and Wyoming, ending on March 31, 1925, it was announced recently by J. C. Rebholz, chairman of the Utah department membership committee. The outcome will decide the Rocky Mountain membership championship, according to Mr. Rebholz. A feature of the campaign will be the awards to local posts of Utah and to the individual member of any post with the highest enrollments to his credit before December 31, 1924. To the post with the highest membership standing in the department at the close of the campaign next March will be presented a silver loving cup. The standing of the posts will be figured on the basis of the paid up membership as of December 31, 1924, compared with the paid up membership at the close of the contest. At the state convention of the winning department a stand of Legion colors will be presented to the victor. The colors will be bought by a pooled fund from the three departments.

'Distinguished Service' for Ten Kansas Posts

Ten posts of the Kansas department of the American Legion qualified for the "Citation for Distinguished Service," offered by National Commander James A. Drain to those posts which on December 1 had enrolled a membership for 1925 equal to their membership at the close of the books for the 1924 convention. The posts qualifying were: Tracy Blair post, Buffalo; Frederick Phillips post, Council Grove; Charles Ernest Scott post, Dodge City; Aaron A. Platner post, Ellis; Charles Walters post, Fredonia; Stephenson post, Greensburg; Harveyville post, Harveyville; Arthur N. Wear post, Horton; Earl W. Taylor post; Seneca; Thayer post, Thayer.

May Hold Memorial for Late Samuel Gompers

Memorial services for Samuel Gompers, veteran president of the American Federation of Labor, who died recently in San Antonio, have been suggested as a part of the program of the 1925 national convention of the American Legion at Omaha. Frank Haucke, department commander of Kansas, presented the suggestion to national headquarters of the Legion for approval.

Mr. Gompers, speaking of the American Legion, once said: "That the pleasant relations between the American Legion and the American Federation of Labor be extended to every post and local union of both organizations, is my earnest and most sincere wish."

WILL ROGERS

Will Rogers, Ziegfeld Follies and screen star, and leading American humorist, announces a series of 'Bull' Durham advertisements. They are worth watching for.

If you want the real truth about why I signed up to write a lot of pieces for these people, it's because I love animals. Have you ever studied that picture of the 'Bull' carefully? . . . have you ever seen such a kind-looking animal? I thought this:—certainly no one who cares as much about dumb creatures as they do would put out anything but the best smoking tobacco possible—so I said all right, I'll write your stuff. Honestly, the money part of it didn't have much to do with it. That is, not very much.

Seriously, though, out where I come from, unless a male member of the population has got that 'Bull' Durham tag hanging from the shirt pocket, he's liable to be arrested for indecent exposure. And, believe me, you can't [illegible] those western hard-boiled eggs much and keep on selling them unless it's got class.

P. S. I'm going to write some more pieces that will appear in this paper. Keep looking for them.

WARNED

Sam, while walking in the woods late one afternoon was surprised by a wild cat which proceeded to chase him to the top limbs of a large oak tree on the edge of a deep canyon. The wildcat was climbing as fast as Sam, and soon had forced him perilously near the decaying end of a long limb extending beyond the edge of the precipice. Sam decided it was time to remonstrate.

;"Wilecat," he said impressively, "Willecat, does yo' make me go one inch furdah, yo' is gwine to have to jump long ways fo' yo' suppah!"

"ODD NOISES?"

SYNOPSIS. — Incapacitated, mentally, by shock, as a result of experiences during the World war, Renshaw makes a proposition to David Campbell, wealthy, elderly man of leisure, that for a year he assume responsibility for him (Renshaw)—practically "buy" him. Doctor Stanley, lifelong friend of Campbell's, indorses the proposition, which Campbell, with some natural misgivings, accepts. The arrangement is that the young man becomes an inmate of the Campbell household, with the nominal duty of secretary. Renshaw meets Verity, Campbell's granddaughter, and gets the impression that she does not like him. Jenks, the butler, Renshaw also feels, is distinctly hostile. Nevertheless, Renshaw went down to dinner feeling quite normal, for him.

Another reflection followed the first, and was far less agreeable. He wondered if Campbell had told his granddaughter the peculiar relation in which he, Renshaw, had entered the family. That he should give this detail a thought was surprising. That he should have the moment's concern that now followed it was nothing short of amazing. He was actually hoping that the girl did not know, that old Campbell had not told her!

The reflection, though vivid in its little instant of life, perished almost as soon as it was born. What difference did it make what the girl or any one else knew or thought? He turned off the lights, opened his door and strode out into the hall.

Again, as in the corridor downstairs, he caught around a corner the flutter of a disappearing bit of white stuff—a natural enough phenomenon in any house, he reflected, and interesting only because of the impression of flight it conveyed. His attention to the incident was fleeting. Evidently Campbell's servants were a curious lot, and the arrival of a stranger in this isolated house was to them an event out of all proportion to its importance.

He entered the living room at exactly one minute before eight, and as he opened the door felt behind him the figure of Jenks, coming to announce dinner. Campbell and his granddaughter were already in the room, the latter before a grand piano, which Renshaw, in his abstraction, had not observed during his first visit. The girl had been playing or singing, he assumed, though he had heard no music. Now, seated sidewise on the piano-stool, she was absently turning the sheets on the music rack and lending an ear to the monologue of an old lady who sat with Campbell before the fireplace. Her resemblance to him placed her as the old man's sister, but she had entered the world ten or twelve years later. Like Verity, she was in full evening dress. She wore a superb diamond-and-pearl collar; and half a dozen diamond, sapphire and emerald rings relentlessly called attention to the enlarged joints of her fingers. Her white hair was as elaborately waved and puffed as if she were going to a ball. As Renshaw went toward her he heard the conclusion of her monologue, delivered on a high-pitched, plaintive key and without the slightest pause:

"Of course you will belittle the matter Davy as you always do but I've told you before and I tell you again that your habit of leaving so many details to the servants will eventually drive us out of house and home as to the way they act some of them didn't get in till after twelve last night though where they could have been is more than I know unless James drove them to town in the service car which Verity has expressly forbidden him to do without permission but they never pay any attention to what one orders anyway so what is the use of giving them orders—"

Old David Campbell raised a thin hand.

"One moment, Kitty," he said good-humoredly. "Let me present my new secretary, Mr. Renshaw. Renshaw, this lady is my sister, Mrs. Pardee, and she's got more troubles than any one you ever met before. She'll tell them all to you, too; you may be sure of that."

He chuckled over his own joke, while Renshaw bowed over the wrinkled hand that lay in his own.

The voice of Jenks placidly repeated the announcement of dinner, and David Campbell offered his arm to his sister. Renshaw hesitated. Was he expected formally to escort Miss Campbell? Or would she resent such an assumption on his part? She was as proud as the devil, that girl—every line of her and every glance of her eyes proved that. Also, she was really amazingly lovely. Feeling very unsure of himself, he approached her and formally offered his arm, on which she remotely laid a perfect hand. Together they walked the length of the long room and, crossing the hall, entered the dining room on its opposite side.

Like the living room, it was large and beautiful. There was spaciousness in all the rooms of the old house, and a beauty of furnishing for which the somewhat confused architecture of the exterior had not prepared one. Four high-backed and carved Florentine chairs waited for their occupants at the round table, whose tall orange candles, aided by the firelight, gave the big room its sole illumination.

Renshaw began to feel very much as if he were in a dream. In the mood in which he had approached Campbell that afternoon he would have agreed to clean out furnaces and work around the grounds. As it was, he stood committed to any task he was offered, however menial. Yet here he was, an intimate part of a charming group, seated at the right of old Mrs. Pardee, and with the beauty of Verity Campbell opposite him on which to feed his eyes. He acknowledged the beauty, but let his eyes drift past it. It was there, but it had no message for him.

Once, looking across the table, he suddenly met Verity's eyes and for an instant held them. There was a momentary dancing light in them—like a flicker of sunshine on the surface of a dark pool. Also, the corners of her mouth quivered in a half smile, which passed even as it came. Mercifully he was spared overhearing the comment Verity made to her grandfather a little later under cover of the continued babble of Mrs. Pardee.

"I think your bondman is going to cheer us up," she murmured.

"Cheer us! That young monument to gloom!" The old man shook his head. "I'm afraid he's going to get horribly on our nerves."

He experienced anew the sensation that this acquisition of his had already too frequently supplied, though their association was so brief—an emotion of mingled admiration and resentment, unusual and unsettling. To banish it, he turned to Verity.

"Is Madame Hvoeslef having one of her sick headaches?"

"Yes, poor dear."

Renshaw pricked up his ears. There was still another member of the family, then, or a guest. Whoever she was, Miss Campbell liked her. The modulations of the girl's voice on the three words she had spoken made that quite clear.

When dinner was over, Campbell led the way back to the living room, with some lingering hint of resentment in the stiff lines of his shoulders, and almost curtly commanded Verity to sing.

Renshaw heard the command with his nearest mental approach to relief. But, at least, it would eliminate the necessity of a general conversation. He dropped into a chair in a corner near the piano, and, though he was aware of the unwisdom of his course, let himself sink into the black abyss that always awaited his unguarded moments.

After all, had he done right to come here? Hadn't he, instead, added the capstone to the towering structure of his misery? For he had offered himself, and now it was too late to retreat. He was bought, and committed to God alone knew what enterprise—for both Stanley and Campbell had hinted that his new life, if he entered upon it, might hold more than the routine possibilities.

He pulled himself up in a sudden ascent to the present. Something was happening to him—something as wonderful as that hour of sleep had been. A stream of music had been flowing past him; and now, as he began to listen, it seemed to lift him and bear him on it to another world, a world of love and passion and beauty. The girl was singing—and the girl's singing was unlike any he had heard before. What she was singing was a Russian folksong, whose accompaniment was like swiftly flowing water.

When she had finished, David Campbell was asleep; but the plaintive voice of Mrs. Pardee broke the momentary stillness:

"I do wish Verity that you'd learn some cheerful songs such as other girls sing gay and bright you know from the musical comedies there must be cheerful music in the world though we never hear any—"

Renshaw rose abruptly and went to the piano.

"Thank you very much," he said. "And—good-night."

For an instant her deep eyes met his, their expression as remote as his own.

"Good-night, Mr. Renshaw," she said casually.

Renshaw crossed back to the little old lady by the fire.

"I'm slipping off to my room," he explained. "If Mr. Campbell should want me—"

"He won't he'll sleep till ten and then James will come in and take him to bed how he can sleep so much at his age I don't know I myself don't average five hours a night last night I lay awake from twelve to five that's how I happened to hear those servants come in—"

In some way Renshaw stemmed the verbal tide and made his escape. As he approached the door of his room, it opened and two persons came out—Jenks and a woman. The woman was immaculate in a white gown, white cap, and white apron, but she was not the trim housemaid of one's dreams. She was past middle age and inclined to stoutness, and the expression of her plain face was rather dour.

"This is Annie, sir, the chambermaid. We've been airing your room and putting in fresh linen—"

Jenks spoke so quickly that Renshaw, who in his abstraction would have passed the pair almost without noticing them, looked at them with closer attention. It then occurred to him that the enterprise of changing the linen in his room hardly called for the efforts of two servants, but he did not dwell on the thought. Also, Annie was contributing her modest share to the verbal report.

"You will always find extra towels on the shelf of this closet, sir," she said primly. "I leave the extra supply for the floor there, because there's no place in the bathroom but the one rack."

"And—and excuse me, sir, but there's another thing."

Jenks was speaking again, and Annie, with fitting humility in the presence of her superior, moved a little to one side.

"Might I speak frankly, sir?" Jenks was almost humble.

"Of course." Renshaw waited with his detached air. The man wet his lips.

"There's—there's some queer things going on in the old house, sir. If you hear odd noises during the night, it's best to pay no attention to them."

Renshaw frowned. "Odd noises?" he repeated. "What kind of noises?"

"That's all I can say, sir. And I'm exceeding my duty, sir, in saying that much. But it's well meant."

Renshaw nodded, his half-formed interest relaxing under a memory of certain sentences in his interview with Campbell to which he had attached no great importance at the time.

"All right, Jenks. Thank you," he said, and passed on. As he closed his door he glanced back. Both Jenks and Annie were standing where he had left them, staring after him. Caught in the act, they started down the corridor and parted at its end. Jenks descending the staircase, the woman disappearing around a distant corner. The flutter of her skirt as she went stirred Renshaw's memory. Surely twice before today he had seen the final whisk of that skirt.

He entered his room, still slightly frowning. Everything was in order. It was all reassuringly natural, and yet—what the deuce was there about Jenks' manner that got on one's imagination and made one exaggerate the importance of the simplest trifles?

He undressed slowly, but instead of going to bed he slipped on his dressing gown and, after turning off the lights, sat down in the chair before the fire. There, clasping his hands behind his head, he leaned back and grimaced at himself. The simple truth was that he did not quite dare to go to bed. Under the surface atmosphere of comfort and normality that lay over the house, something had been injected, something intangible. Of course his imagination was playing tricks with him. At the back of his head was the thought of a mystery at which both Stanley and Campbell had hinted, and which, of course, had to do with the warning just received from Jenks.

Renshaw sees Verity is a beauty, but woman's beauty has no message for him. Will that last?

Daylight Frightened Mule

Flooded workings in a Mahanoy City (Pa.) coal mine gave a mule called Jack his first opportunity to view sunshine that he has had in 15 years. At first he refused to budge from the conveyor that carried him from his dungeon, and it required force to get him to his new lodging place, where he was afraid to venture forth for several days.

EARLY SPRING MILLINERY; SPRINGTIME KNITTED MODES

JUDGING from the assemblies of hats now being reviewed by millinery dealers and bought for their establishments, the incoming spring is going to be a go-as-you-please season in shapes. No type has taken a dominant place in the modes, where many styles are represented, but a preference may develop later on. Just now a poke, a tricorn, a turban, an off-the-face or cloche with higher crowns, all claim attention with equal chances of becoming favorites.

A spring hat needs nothing beyond the fact that it is a spring hat, to make it interesting; but Easter arrives fairly early in April this year, so that the choice of new millinery will be pressing for attention very soon. With so much diversity in shapes and such entrancing colors there is no excuse for unflattering headwear. It is amazing how much hats can do for their wearers and therefore they should be given as much or more time and consideration than anything else. Buy a hat first, and get one that does something for you besides cover your head. If a certain model proves wonderfully becoming be a little extravagant and economize in some other direction.

Spring Hats in Varied Shapes.

Only four of the new arrivals are shown in the group of hats pictured, but these are so different from one another in shape that they indicate the diversity there is to choose from. A pretty poke of faille silk starts off the group, faced with silk in a lighter color and trimmed with workroom-made silk rose and foliage. Hats like this are shown in varied color combinations. Just below it at the right is a hat of silk and fine straw combined. It is an off-the-face shape of the tricorn variety and has a charming adornment of rings and scrolls made of the braid. To the left another hat of silk reveals a dressier type with fans of metallic lace and a huge silk rose embellishing it. A pretty tailored turban finishes the group, made of black satin piped with white and bearing a rhinestone and pearl ornament at the right side.

Zig-zag, shell, lightning, lace—no, this is not the key to a cross-word puzzle—simply a few terms describing some of the novelty stitches which are playing such an important part in spring knitted modes. It is at once obvious, at advance style showings, that many of the newer sweaters are declaring their chic through the medium of fanciful stitch. In the picture an unusual "lightning" stitch, to use a professional term, lends interest to a charming springtime knitted slipon done in jade and white.

With the ultimatum gone forth in the field of things knitted that novelty stitch is to sound a new note in the fashioning of spring garments, behold genius accepting the challenge, setting its machinery to perform wondrous feats in that direction. We see, for instance, in some of the smartest advance sweater models, a lovely shell stitch as exquisitely wrought as if done by hand, yet it is the proud achievement of marvelous machinery. What's the use of patiently knitting and knitting? Why purl and purl and then plain stitch, and then all over again, according to directions, when, after all, machinery outrivals our best efforts? Not even an expert of the knitting needle can attain the exquisite effects which are noted in the latest filmy lace. Knit scarfs and even dresses are now knitted by machine, to look like rare and costly lace. Of course, one expects these delicately wrought knitted dresses, sheer and lovely as they are, to be very expensive. On the contrary, they are really very reasonable. Their coloring is most intriguing, too. Pastel lavenders, orchids, blues and citron shades abound and some of the prettiest are pure white, or white with rainbow borderings.

Novelty Stitches Give Chic Touch.

Speaking of sweaters which make fancy stitch their outstanding attraction, sometimes the effect is emphasized by contrasting a body knitted in novelty stitch, with sleeves and trimmings done in conventional solid stitch. This combining of novelty with plain stitch is especially characteristic of the latest favorite, golf coats.

Hipbands are especially chosen as a vantage point for exploiting the scheme of contrasting fancy and plain stitch. Charming types of this sort stress plain knit blouse sweaters, with hipbands knit in colorful jacquard patterns. Still another decorative touch is added by bordering the ends of an attached scarf to match the fanciful hipband.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and had spells as if my heart was affected, and it helped me a lot. The doctors told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try 'Pinkham's,' as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe 'Pinkham's' cured me. Everyone who saw me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and like it very much." — Mrs. E. GOULD, 4000 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

Weeks and the Chicago Drainage Canal

Secretary John W. Weeks (portrait herewith) will be much in the limelight for some time, for as head of the War department he will bulk large in the affairs of the Chicago sanitary district in which a number of states and Canada are interested. The decision of the United States Supreme court forbidding, after March 5, the withdrawal of more than 250,000 cubic feet of water per minute from the lake for Chicago's drainage canal is likely to have serious effects unless there is emergency relief by the War department.

This relief, in the shape of a temporary permit to use the amount of water now taken from the lake, approximately 600,000 feet per minute—is expected to be granted by the secretary of war.

Bills in congress to continue this permit during hurried construction of sewage disposal plants (some now under way) may extend the relief over a period of some years. If the court's order is carried out, Chief Engineer Kelly of the Chicago drainage district, says it means "the contamination of wells in country towns and the turning of the Chicago and Des Plaines rivers into cesspools."

Relief by the secretary of war from the reduction order is provided by the court's decision, which says the injunction is "without prejudice to any permit that may be issued by the secretary of war, according to law."

The Mysterious Workings of Providence

Fred A. Britten of Chicago (portrait herewith), who champions an efficient navy because he thinks the Japs are feeling warlike, got up in the house the other day and said, in part:

"Mr. Chairman, I have been josted a good deal around the house about an editorial in the Washington Post. I read it four or five times and cannot understand the density of the gentleman who wrote it—and by the way, I suppose it is a gentleman, who calls himself 'The Bystander.' Just what the Bystander means or stands for, of course, is subject to many opinions. In a number of places he says that the same beneficent Providence that makes guinea pigs also made Fred Britten. Well, I take it that the same Divine Providence also made the Bystander. He also made beautiful peacocks, and is directly responsible for the legs of the high-minded and talented editor in chief of the Washington Post. You probably have seen them in short silk breeches in the Court of St. James. That same Providence also made the naval expert whose desire to improve the American navy gave him columns, aye, pages, in the Washington Post recently."

Stone Goes to Supreme Court Bench

Associate Justice Joseph McKenna has concluded his active service as a member of the Supreme court, and Attorney General Harlan F. Stone (portrait herewith) has been nominated to succeed him. The resignation of Justice McKenna deprives the Pacific coast of representation in the membership of the court. Solicitor General Beck will automatically become acting attorney general upon Mr. Stone's retirement.

The resignation of Justice McKenna after being on the Supreme bench since January 26, 1898, was made known with unusual ceremony. Chief Justice Taft made the announcement after a large basket of roses had been placed by the marshal of the court upon the bench in front of the retiring member.

Harlan Fiske Stone was born at Chesterfield, N. H., October 11, 1872—a year before Calvin Coolidge. They were close friends at college. Columbia University School of Law gave Mr. Stone his LL. B. in 1898, and he was admitted to the New York bar the same year.

From 1899 to 1905 he was a lecturer and professor at the same school, being elected dean at Columbia in 1916, which place he held when appointed attorney general by President Coolidge April 4 of last year. He was also a member of Sullivan & Cromwell of New York city.

Mr. Stone married Miss Agnes Harvey of Chesterfield, N. H., in 1899. He is a Republican, a member of the Episcopalian church, and numerous legal, social and college organizations.

First Woman Governor Is Inaugurated

A climax to more than 55 years of equal rights for women in Wyoming was seen at Cheyenne when Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross formally took over her duties as governor of the state. Inaugural ceremonies, Spartan-like in their severity and simplicity, marked the induction into office of the first woman governor of any commonwealth in the United States.

With a pledge placing her mental and physical faculties at the disposal of the people for the administration of affairs of state and calling for "Divine guidance" to direct her, a woman, heavily swathed in mourning for her husband, the late Gov. William B. Ross, stepped into the place made vacant by the tragic death of her husband less than three months ago.

Tears welled in her eyes as Acting Governor Lucas, in a brief address, pledged to her the fullest cooperation of the state officials in her administration of the government, called upon the electorate of Wyoming to stand solidly behind her and paid a glowing tribute to the virtues of her husband.

It was a fitting and added tribute to the womanhood of the country that the oath of office was administered by one of the men—Chief Justice C. N. Potter of the Wyoming Supreme court—who on September 30, 1889, drafted the clause granting equal rights to women of any state for the first time, at the constitutional convention held in Cheyenne.

LACKING IN FAITH

The prisoner came before the court on a charge of murder. Many distinguished legal lights had assembled to hear the case.

The charge was read out, and the judge, as is usual, asked the man in the dock if he would like to be defended by an attorney.

"No, my lord," came the reply, "this is too serious a matter."

Good as a Scarecrow

Said a woman to her neighbor over the suburban garden wall, "I hope my daughter's singing does not annoy you."

"On the contrary," came the sweet reply, "my husband and I appreciate it very much. It keeps the birds away from our berry bushes."

Rather Curious

TOO REALISTIC

"Did you enjoy the amateur dramatic show last night?"

"Well, I thought it was too realistic."

"Really?"

"Yes, it said on the program, 'One hour is supposed to elapse between the first and second acts,' and it actually did."—Windsor Magazine.

Your doctor advises internal cleanliness

HE WILL tell you that the first results of constipation — headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. For sale by all druggists.

"A Well Improved Farm in Redwood County" was the sign under a beautiful farmstead displayed in the Redwood County booth in the Agricultural Building at the Minnesota State Fair last fall. It was the picture of the farm of Henry Lau, president of the Minnesota Crop Improvement Association, and also president of the Tri-County Farm Improvement Association of Redwood, Lyon and Murray Counties.

The picture, which is reproduced in this issue, tells the story of the state of improvement of the Lau farm as it stands today. It is also indicative of the spirit of Henry Lau, a man who believes in building up land, improving his crops and livestock, and whose example and constructive leadership are doing much to encourage other farmers to follow better methods of farming.

The picture does not tell, however what this farm was ten years ago when Mr. Lau moved onto it. It can not tell the story of how this farm had been mined for 30 years before Mr. Lau bought it. It does indicate Mr. Laus' achievement in building up a highly productive farm out of what was once a run-down farm.

Started with Little

Mr. Lau moved to Redwood County from Hancock County, Iowa, in 1914, where he had built up the old family homestead which had been badly run down. The year before he came to Minnesota in search of cheap land, and in Redwood County he saw his present farm. It had small grained for 30 years, and the soil had been mined of its fertility. The only buildings were a small frame farm house and a cattle shed with space in the center for hay and room on the sides for cattle and horses and a silo.

Mr. Lau bought this farm of 320 acres for just what it was, and with the direct intention of building it up into a well-improved profit-making farm. He saw the many poor points about this farm, but he recognized also that it had many possibilities It had one advantage at that time. It was comparatively free from foul weeds.

That fall, even before he had moved to Minnesota, Mr. Lau started tiling his land. On his return to Iowa that winter he bought two purebred Poland China Sows, which were the start of his present herd of 35 to 40 purebred sows.

In the spring of 1914, he moved to Redwood County and started in with the tiling where he had left off the fall before. He seeded 60 acres of medium red clover with barley. The barley yielded ten buschels per acre, and oats went 20 to 25 bushels per acre. Forty acres of the clover land proved esecially poor early in the spring of 1915 he gave it a light top dressing of manure, hauled from the rotten straw stack bottoms and old manure piles which had gathered for years around the barns. The 40 acre field yielded only 17 light loads of clover hay that year. A neighbor who had known this farm 36 years said that the field had never benn manured. That fall Mr. Lau hauled out more manure, giving the field a heavy dressing. In 1916, he pastured it, plowed it up in the fall, and the next spring put it into corn.That was 1917, and in spite of the fact that it was a soft corn year, heg ot 50 bushels of fair quality corn to the acre. In 1918, hep ut this field into oats and got 75 bushels to theacre.

This is a sample of the treatment that the whole farm has received Mr. Lau has steadily increased his acreage of legumes until in recent year he has seeded down about 100 acres a year of these soil building crops. He has included sweet clover in his cropping system in more recent yers. He has increased his alfalfa acreage from three acres to 40 acres in the last ten years and he estimates that he has plowed under at least an equal ocreage of alfalfa. In 1922 he bought another quarter section of lnd and is building it up in the same way.

The soil on the Lau farm is a heavy clay loam with a clay subsoil The work of tiling the farm was carried on with vigor up to 1920. There are now 110,000 feet of tile on the farm, and in samep laces the tile is not more than five rods apart.

"Some of my neighbors say that even my hills are tiled," said Mr. Lau with a laugh. "That is not true, strictly speaking, for I have tiled only part way up on the high ground, reaching the places where the water seeps down from the hill tops and keeps the land sour unless drainage is provided.

Value of Tile

"The tile shows up best in the off-years and off seasons. Take in the year 1919, for instance. The cloud burst which hit our section in June and drowned out the corn in many places where farms were not tiled, and for a long time it kept many farmers from getting onto their fields to cultivate them. My land dried much quicker that that which was not tiled and I got onto my fields and cleaned them up. Part of my corn went 50 bushels to the acre; some yielded 70 bushels that year."

Mr. Lau had raised an improved strain of Silver King corn where he was farming in Iowa. He brought some of the seed with him when he came to Redwood county, and planted that the first few years. but at the same time he looked about for some good Minnesota strains of Silver King.

"I found a strain, Meinert's Silver King, that seem best adapted to our conditions. We have a very rich soil now, and this variety seems to be about the limit that can be grown in our section. It probably would not do well on poorer soil in this part of the state. During 1920 and 1921, which were good corn years, we got an average of bushels to the acre of high quality Silver King.

"During the last three years, the yields have been reduced drought, hail, and the unfavorable season of 1924, our yields have ranged from 40 to 65 bushels to the acre. During recent years we have been growing yellow corn. Murdock in addition to our white corn, because of its better feeding quality We are looking now for a yellow corn that will yield as heavy as white dent.

Testing New Varieties.

"We are also looking for a variety of oats that will stand up on fertile ground. We raised Gopher Oats, the new variety originated by the Minnesota Experiment Station for the first time last year. They went 80 bushels to the acre. This variety gives promise of meeting the needs for an oat with a stiff straw. Iowa 103 oats went 70 bushels to the acre on our farm in 1924.

"We have come to the conclusion after trying out all varieties of oats both erly and late, that the early certain of making a heavier crop nine times out of ten, than the late oats. They also make a better seeding crop when seeding down the land because they are taken off about days earlier; they get out of danger of storms and pests sooner than the late oats; nd we are able to get our fall plowing ten days earlier.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Lau and Family. Mr. Lau is Taking His Two Sons Ewald and Albert, into Partnership With Him.

Mr. Lau has raised Minturki winter wheat the past four years with good results every year except 1924 when the drought in the fall of cut down the yields. He had 25 acres in this crop in 1924, which went 30 bushels per acre. In 1924 he had 39½ acres of Winona with Distant flax, a new variety developed at the Minnesota Experiment Station, which went 22 bushels per acre. A large part of the income from the farm is derived from the sale of improved seeds.

A well balanced program of livestock production is carried on this farm.

Boys Enter into Partnership

Ewald, the oldest son, 22 years old, is farming in partnership with his father. Albert, the second oldest son, will be taken into the partnership this spring when he will be 21 years old. There are three boys and three girls in the family. All have attended the agricultural high school or are still in the school. All of them have taken part in boys' and girls' club work except the youngest, who is too young to start.

Ten years of hard work have brought remarkable change in the Lau farm. It hs been changed from a worn out, run down farm to one of the most productive in the county west. The man who has done this constructive work has become recognized and honored by his fellow farmers who have elected him to office in their crop improvement associations and asked him to help promote the cause of better agriculture.

Henry Lau has set a splendid example on his farm in showing what the desire to improve things can compolish and properly directed and carried out. His accomplishment should be an inspiration to every Northwestern farmer to improve and keep up fertility of his soil and adopt improved varieties of crops and better livestock.

SENATE PASSES BILL FOR OPEN SEASON ON PHEASANT

Proof Furnished that Birds Are Detrimental to Crops

A bill to permit farmers of northern Iowa to protect their crops against pheasants by killing or capturing them in unlimited numbers after an open season has been declared by the state game warden, was passed by the senate today without opposition. The measure was sponsored by Senator Gunderson of Winenbago county. About 300 pheasants were placed in the Pilot Knob state park some years ago and have increased so rapidly that a half dozen counties now have millions of them, the senator said. The farmers he declared, have shown conclusively that they have extensively damaged crops, instead of aiding agriculture. The bill provides that upon petition of 150 farmers in any one county, the game warden may fix an open season and pay a bounty out of the fish and game funds upon birds captured. The captured birds might be distributed among other counties desiring them. The senate also passed the Gilchrist bill under which a person may hold possession of skins, furs or carcasses of animals affected by a closed season for more than ten days after the beginning of the closed season, if he proves possession was gained legally.

KLEMME DOWNS SWALEDALE IN CLOSE GAME

15-14 is Final Count in Fast Game Last Friday Night

TO PLAY BRITT AT CO. MEET

The Klemme Boys met the Swaledale quintet on the local floor Friday night and defeated them in the closest game of the season. The score at the final whistle was 15-14.

This is the first time Klemme has beat Swaledale and they are feeling pretty good over the fact. Swaledale has a good record this year, having beat several of the larger teams this season.

The game started off with a bang for Klemme when Patet sank in a ringer in the first few minutes, and before Swaledale had scored once, Klemme had six points. Before the half was over, however, Swaledale overcame this lead and was one point ahead of Klemme, the score being 9-10. The last half was close, through out, neither team being more than a point or two ahead of the other.

To F. Gibbs, belongs a great deal of credit for winning the game. His defense was impregnable and he broke up play after play. Patet probably played the best game he has this season. in spite of the fact. that he threw his shoulder out of joint, twice in the first half of the game.

Team play on the part of the locals was in some respects, not up tu standard, but passing and shooting were better.

Followin is the lineup and summary. G represents field goals, FT Foul throws, FM foul throws missed and P personal fouls.

Back Bad Since the Grip?

Has a cold or grip sapped your strength? Do you suffer constant backache, feel nervous and depressed? Then look to your kidneys! Many cases of kidney trouble are the result of infectious disease. The kidneys often break down under the strain of filtering disease-created poisons from the blood. That's why a cold or grip often leaves backache, headaches, dizzy spells and irregular kidney action. Help your weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills. Doan's have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

An Iowa Case

Mrs. F. A. Seeley, 300 River St., Manchester, Iowa, says: "I had severe backaches and felt dull and without energy. A cold settled on my kidneys and they acted irregularly. I had spells of dizziness, also. Doan's Pills, which I used, strengthened my back and kidneys and I felt better in every way."

MADAME HVOESLEF

SYNOPSIS.—Incapacitated mentally by shock, as a result of experiences during the World war, Renshaw makes a proposition to David Campbell, wealthy, elderly man of leisure, that for a year he assume responsibility for him (Renshaw)—practically "buy" him. Doctor Stanley, life-long friend of Campbell's, indorses the proposition, which Campbell, with some natural misgivings, accepts. The arrangement is that the young man become an inmate of the Campbell household, with the nominal duty of secretary. Renshaw meets Verity, Campbell's granddaughter, and gets the impression that she does not like him. Jenks, the butler, Renshaw also feels, is distinctly hostile. Renshaw has a feeling that the servants are spying on him. Jenks warns him that there are "queer things" going on in the house. That night he is disturbed by the appearance on the wall of his room of a small blue circle of light. Mysterious noises in the corridor outside his door cause him to investigate, but he discovers nothing unusual. His employer asks him to ignore anything he does not understand.

Renshaw hesitated. Everything had been so normal, so human, so reassuring this morning, that the experience of the previous night, the noise of that crawling thing in the corridor, already seemed like a dream. Still, this, if ever, was the time to speak.

"Nothing of importance," he said slowly. "Merely some unusual noises in the hall."

"Unusual noises? What kind of noises?"

"Why, rather as if a very heavy weight were being dragged along—that kind of thing."

Renshaw spoke unwillingly. He felt, and looked, rather foolish.

"Perhaps something was." Campbell was himself again, smiling his charmingly whimsical smile. "There's a lot of work to be done in this house. Possibly a trunk was being moved—"

"But—it was midnight."

Campbell raised his eyebrows. Then he laughed.

"I'm afraid we're magnifying trifles," he said good-humoredly. "But I'll say this much before we drop the subject. We have no reason to fear anything that is in the house, and personally I don't believe we have anything to fear from outside. But if you should at any time see suspicious-looking individuals lurking around, in the grounds or on the road, let me know." He broke off with a grimace. "It sounds like melodrama, doesn't it? But the fact is, I suppose we've got to keep our eyes open."

"Very well, sir. Our understanding is that nothing unusual I observe inside the house is to be reported, but that if I see anything suggestive outside I am to tell you about it. Is that right?"

"Yes—I think so. I don't see how anything—That's understood," he decided more briskly; and, opening the door, passed through.

Left alone, Renshaw swung the typewriter up to the top of the desk, turned the small key that held it in place there, and resolutely attacked his mail. It was good to have real work to do, and to know that he could do it. It was good to feel that he was earning his way.

A mild surprise awaited him at noon. He entered the dining room a few minutes after the summons of the luncheon bell, and found not only Campbell, Verity, and Mrs. Pardee at the table, but a strange woman seated at the right of the host. She was a gracious and even majestic woman, with a figure of the late forties, the snow-white hair of seventy, and a dark face and singularly brilliant eyes that might have been thirty-five. She graciously inclined her head when the young man was presented, but did not speak.

Renshaw bowed and took his place in equal silence. This, it appeared, was Madame Hvoeslef, whose passage to Europe on the twenty-second he had just engaged. He immediately decided that she was, in some way, a central figure in the mystery to which Campbell and Stanley had referred.

She looked the part. The most casual glance at her showed that she had been, and possibly was still, undergoing a severe nervous strain. She started uncontrollably at the lightest sounds. Her brilliant eyes held a look of anxiety that at moments changed to fear. Studying her, one subconsciously thought of diplomacy and intrigue, of spies, of Nihilists, of all the rest of the horde that make for action and movement in modern fiction and drama.

It was almost a relief to rest his eyes on Verity, though his dislike of her had increased since their morning encounter. But, at least, there was no mystery about her. She was discussing a new opera with Madame Hvoeslef. Music seemed a passion common to them both. At Renshaw's left, Mrs. Pardee poured her inevitable plaintive monologue into the young man's ear.

"It's all wrong," she was saying, "and I've told my brother so from the first whatever happens he can't say that I haven't warned him but that's always the way with Davy I never knew him to see anything that was coming until it came though I've spent my whole life one might say showing him the handwriting on the wall."

Renshaw pricked up his ears. This sounded more interesting than most of Mrs. Pardee's talk. He had lost her introductory sentences in his interest in this superb foreigner across the table. But another moment revealed the fact that Mrs. Pardee's topic was the sugar shortage that followed the end of the war. Her idea of meeting the shortage, it appeared, was to fill the cellars of Tawno Ker with barrels of sugar. There was space in the storeroom for an enormous supply—

Renshaw bent his head with grave attention, but he ceased to hear her. He had returned to his own thoughts, which, when they had their way with him, swung him back to the words of Jenks:

"Queer things happen in the old house, sir. If you hear anything odd—"

He set his teeth. For some reason, his mood of peace, of acceptance, of complacent outlook, had changed again. He was conscious of an intense and increasing sense of uneasiness—an uneasiness that almost took the form of a dread of the coming night.

Chapter IV

The Thing.

Back in the study, Renshaw hurled himself into his work. The pile of finished letters at his side steadily mounted, and Renshaw, poring over his notes or back-bent above the typewriter, recalled Campbell's combined instructions and confidences with a touch of the new-born appreciation he had felt in the hour of receiving them.

As each letter was typewritten he settled back in his chair to read it, and after ten or fifteen minutes of this he made a gratifying discovery. Those letters, following Campbell's orders but written in Renshaw's words, were not perfunctory affairs. They were short, businesslike, and to the point; but without exception they were worded exactly as Campbell, and not Renshaw, would have worded them. Whether they consisted of two typewritten lines or twelve, they held the essence of the personality of David Campbell.

Taking this in, Renshaw puckered his lips in a noiseless whistle, and then very slowly and stiffly grinned. The thing he had done had been done by that part of his brain which he had not used for two years. The achievement was clever—really artistic. He wondered whether Campbell would appreciate it, and even before the thought had shaped itself knew that he would. No one would appreciate it more promptly or fully than Campbell.

With the finished letters in his hands, he went to the living room. It was almost tea time, and he expected to find the old man there before the fire. He was not disappointed. Campbell was not alone, however, and as Renshaw took in the slender figure of Verity perched on the arm of her grandfather's big chair, the eyes of the secretary narrowed. He was absurdly annoyed by the presence of Miss Campbell. His momentary self-complacency died as he crossed the room.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said stiffly. "But would you like to glance over these letters before I mail them, or shall I—"

Campbell extended his hand.

"I will look at them," he said quickly. "Perhaps it would be better to leave them with me half an hour."

His last words trailed into an indistinct murmur. His eyes were already running down the letter that topped the pile.

"Wait a moment, please," he added. "Hart, the chauffeur, takes the mail to Wainly at five. Perhaps we can rush these through— Better drink your tea while I look over them. Verity, my dear, please ring for Jenks."

He was reading as he spoke. Now he handed his granddaughter two of the letters. She took them with an air of surprise, ran her eyes down the typewritten lines, and smiled.

"And you said you couldn't dictate!" she teased.

"I can't."

Campbell was running over some of the remaining letters, hastily but with obvious interest. Once or twice he smiled a little. Five minutes later he handed Verity another letter. It was the longest in the collection, filling two-thirds of a page. With eyebrows raised and a little twist of the lips that was oddly like her grandfather's, she read it and handed it back. As she did so she glanced at Renshaw, but he was unconscious of the look. His dark face wore its most somber expression. He was a closed and shuttered habitation, of which his soul had drawn down the blinds.

Campbell handed him the mass of letters.

"All right," he said. "We can catch the mail very comfortably. Perhaps you would like to drive over to the station with Hart, though of course there's no need of it. But you might like the air and to see a bit of the country. Why not have Hart drive you around for an hour or so before dinner?"

"Thank you, sir; perhaps I will."

Renshaw was turning to leave the room, when the old man's voice stopped him.

"That's a very interesting thing you've done," he said, nodding toward the letters.

The other did not pretend to misunderstand.

"They wrote themselves," he said. "I didn't realize till I read them that I had been impersonating you. If you would rather have me do them more formally—"

Campbell shook his head.

"It's an amazingly clever piece of work," he said. "I'm quite convinced that I dictated every one of them. They're done exactly the way I should have done them—if I could!"

When the door had closed behind the new secretary, Campbell crossed the tips of his thin old fingers and stared past them into the fire.

"There's a man inside that fellow," he said slowly. "He shows it in his work."

"He does not show it anywhere else," Verity unkindly observed. "My first impression of him is deepening every hour. He's uncanny. He makes me think of a ghost who hates his job of being a ghost." She shivered a little. "Don't talk about him!" she begged.

Renshaw, his letters signed and sealed, went to the garage in search of Hart. He found him testing the engine of a four-seat roadster. The chauffeur was about the age of James. He had sleek brown hair and the thin-lipped, unsmiling mouth that seemed characteristic of the servants in the Campbell menage. He came forward at once to receive the young man's message, and his thin, unsmiling face held a look of respectful readiness.

"My name is Renshaw," said the newcomer.

"Yes, sir."

Hart saluted with a finger to his bare head. The salute had a semi-military quality.

"I've a lot of letters to go out, and Mr. Campbell suggests that I drive to the station with you when you're ready."

"Very good, sir. I will be at the door in five minutes."

Certainly the Campbell servants were well trained.

* * * * * * *

Dinner that night was cheerful, almost gay. Madame Hvoeslef had thrown off the air of strain Renshaw had observed in her during their previous meeting, and was putting her social gifts through their paces. These gifts were unusual. She was a really charming woman, traveled, sophisticated, tolerant, humorous, and understanding. She seemed to know everybody. It was plain that she had moved in high places. But, though she talked well always and brilliantly at times, she resolutely confined herself to impersonal topics. Her talk was the talk of the visitor to many lands.

When they returned to the living room, Verity sang again, accompanied by the foreigner, whose familiarity with the piano was close and sympathetic. By the fire, David Campbell and his sister listened and dozed; and Renshaw, in his corner near the instrument, felt again the untangling of nerve knots, the deep inner content this girl's voice had given him from the first.

It was Madame Hvoeslef who finally broke up the circle with a vague murmur about letters to be written. Renshaw accompanied her to the door and held it open. She passed through with an inclination of the head, but as she reached the threshold the salute ended in a quick forward jerk of command that motioned him into the hall. He followed her, closing the door of the living room as he left it.

Who is Madame Hvoeslef and what does she want of Renshaw, this superb and mysterious foreign woman?

Heroic Monkey

A monkey may be said to have heaped coals of fire upon the head of the entire feline race by a single kindly act. It is well remembered that a good-hearted monkey was the original "cat's paw," pulling hot chestnuts from the fire for the benefit of a scheming cat.

A restaurant owner in Hoxie, Ark., has long had two pets, a monkey and a cat. They are said to have become great friends. Recently the man's restaurant caught fire and was completely destroyed. The manager seized the monkey and carried it to safety. But the rescued creature struggled free and dashed back into the smoke and flames. When it reappeared it was at a window with the cat in its arms. Both animals are safe.

The wood used in making "cedar chests" comes from a species of juniper.

Lacks the Greatest Joys of Life

Many Wives are Childless Because of Ill Health. Read How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Mrs. Benedict

MRS. MARY R. BENEDICT
313 PAYSON STREET, KEWANEE, ILLINOIS

Kewanee, Illinois. — "When I was married about a year and a half I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because of ill health. I did not have any children. I now have two healthy little girls and I am sure I would not have had them had it not been for your medicine. Last spring and summer I got all run down, irregular, and I had awful headaches, and my back and side hurt me so that I could stay up only a short time. My limbs would get so tired and ache till I could cry. I started to take the Vegetable Compound again and used the Sanative Wash, and it was not long till I was relieved. Now I do all my own work and help others. I sure praise Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines to any one I meet that is suffering from similar troubles. I think if mothers with girls would give it to them when they come to womanhood it would make them stronger. People who have known me all my life are astonished to see me now as I was always sickly when in my 'teens until I started taking the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. MARY R. BENEDICT, 313 Payson Street, Kewanee, Ill.

Has a Beautiful Baby Girl Now

Bridport, Vermont.—"In the first place I wanted a baby, but none seemed to come to me. I just love children and my husband is away all day, so I was not happy at all. A doctor told me I could not have a baby until I went to a hospital. But my sisters said, 'Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you will be O.K.' I was nervous, had organic weakness, with backache, sideache, headache and no strength. I had been in bed nearly a week when I began taking the Vegetable Compound. It was all that ever helped me and I just wish you could see my beautiful baby girl. I am fine now, and so is she. I am still taking the medicine as it keeps me well. You may be sure I am recommending the Vegetable Compound and always will."—Mrs. A. W. HOWE, Bridport, Vermont.

PLAY FROCKS FOR KIDDIES; TRIM KNITTED TOPCOATS

SPRING sewing for children is well under way by this time, and the sooner it is finished the better. It is a matter to dispose of early in the year when all the new wash fabrics come in, together with new frocks for little folks, and bring a cheerful springtime atmosphere into the shops with them. All the old-time and dependable favorites made their appearance in January, as usual, along with some novelties in wash fabrics and many ready-tailored looking are these coats of classic simplicity, carrying style conviction in their every detail. The modish straightlined silhouette, to which every woman aspires this season, is interpreted to perfection in these new knitted coats. As to colorings, the combinations are adorable, especially the plaited effects ranging from blendings to boldest contrasts.

Granted that these knitted coats are about as handsome in appearance as made dresses, from which whatever is unusual in styles may be gathered.

But in styles there is nothing radically new and different except in ways of decorating everyday dresses. This spring's dresses and aprons—or apron-dresses—are just one picture-book story after another. By means of cotton floss and an embroidery needle the seamstress becomes an artist and proceeds to make sketches of all things treasured in the hearts of little folks. Little children at play, little familiar animals, Mother Goose illustrations, the little old red schoolhouse down by the lane—and the lane—are all sketched in outline stitch on the dresses of gingham, chambray, linen and cotton cloths that Little Miss wears every day.

Unbleached domestic is as good a medium as anyone could want for apron-dresses to be slipped on over other frocks. One of these is shown in the picture. It is bound with flat white braid or tape, slips on over the head and has a real pocket, holding a handkerchief, which ought to be enough to make its wearer's joy complete. But its appeal lies more in the sketch of "Simple Simon" industriously fishing and a flight of little birds than in merely useful attributes like pockets. The sketch is made in gayly colored floss—brown, red, green, blue.

Of engaging trimness are the knitted topcoats which are making their appearance in the vanguard of spring fashions. Spick-and-span and plaidone could hope for a spring wrap to be. Appearance, however, tells only half the story of the likableness of the knitted coat, such as stylists advocate for the coming season. It is in the wearing thereof that knitted outerwear always makes eloquent appeal. To none other than to things knitted belongs that beguiling comfort which the caressing, soothing touch of softest woolen yarns always imparts. From this standpoint of joy-giving comfort the new knitted coats are no exception. In fact, one of their chief allurements is the exquisite refinement of the yarns employed in their making.

A smart three-quarter length knitted coat which follows fashion's decree for plaids is shown in the accompanying picture. It is knitted of white mohair patterned with horizon blue. Patrician style and superior finesse are apparent at a glance in this model.

Red, that favored of all colors, at present is used in several shades, ed on a white background, for a very interesting knitted topcoat displayed at a recent style show. There was an intermingling of silk with the wool in this strikingly handsome garment.

Spick and Span and Tailored Looking.

Most of the knitted models in the latest showings feature the tailored effects. Even when the body of the coat is developed in an allover patterned effect, the cuffs and collars are preferably plain.

35 MILLIONS FOR WEEDS

Iowa State Weed Authority Urges Control of Profit Eaters

Weeds cost Iowa Farmers $35,000 000 in reduced crop yields during 1924, besides causing a great deal of annoyance, making fields and other places unsightly, and leaving behind them seeds for another weed crop, according to Dr. H. L. Pammel, botany specialist, Iowa State College, who is probably the greatest authority on weeds in the United States.

In addition to many weeds which have long been regarded as Iowa's worst, such as quack grass. Canada thistle, cocklebur, smooth and curled lock, buckhorn and horse nettle, new ones are constantly coming in so that the weed problem is getting more serious each year. Recently sow thistle, Knapp weed, a new form of the Canada thistle, and bullalo bur have been discovered in this state and threaten to become very troublesome.

The best way to keep these pests from spreading is to teach the farmer to recognize them so that they may be destroyed when first introduced. Surveys covering 36 Iowa counties have been made and the results of these surveys, including a description of the weeds found in each county and their control measures are soon to be published. Surveys are eventually to be made for every county in the state.

GOOD ROADS ARE NEEDED

Lamoni ,Ia., Feb. 17— Citizens of Iowa who are in favor of a state-wide system of good roads for the benefti of the present generation should write to their senators and repesentative in the Legislature, telling them their attitude, W. A. Hopkins of this city, treasurer of the Iowa Good Roads Association, warned today

"Everyone in Iowa wants good roads" Mr. Hopkins said. ,"The only difference in opinion is as to the best way to get them.

"Our state Senators and Representatives are not particularily interested in what our association thinks about road legislation. However, they represent the people of every county in the state, and they are interested in the sentiment of their constitutents toward the proposed progrom for improved roads.

"For that reason, every good road advocate in Iowa should sit down and write to his senator and representative, telling them frankly his views on this question in general and on the program proposed to provide a system of improved roads in this state that start somewhere and go somewhere. Unless the people themselves inform representatives as to their views, progressive action for good roads may be delayed in this session of the General Assembly."

At the same time, Mr. Hopkins took occasion to point out the purposes and aims of the Iowa Good Roads Association.

"We are representing no certain class of business, or community, or section of the state," he said. "We are not interested in any particular kind of paving material or gravel. We are accepting the opinion of highway engineers who have made a careful and scientific study of the subject, as to which roads should be graveled and which roads should be paved. Activities of our association are financed soley from small contributions from good roads enthusiasts in all sections of the state. We believe it is of the utmost importance to the state as a whole, and to every individual citizen, that the Legislature take some definite action this winter toward getting Iowa out of the mud—toward establishing a road-building program that will keep Iowa abreast of Minnesota, Missouri Illinois, Wisconsin and our progressive sister states of the Middle West."

GOOD DRAINAGE FOR HOTBED

Soil in Frame Should Be Allowed to Settle for Few Days

Build the hotbed in a well-drained suny location where it will be protected from cold winds. For the small hotbed it is best to dig a pit slightly larger than the dimensions of the bed, filling up the place where the soil has been removed with straw y stable manure, preferably horse manure.

Old lumber may be used for the frame, but the boards should be at least 12 inches wide. For the home gardener, old window sashes may be used, but the commercial sashes will be found somewhat more satisfactory. Double glass sashes offer more protection against frost injury than single light sashes. Place the frame in position on the manure, raise the north side to a height of four inches and put blocks of wood or bricks under the corner. This is for good lighting and permits moisture to run off rather than into the bed.

Fill the interior of the frame with rich loamy soil to a depth of five or six inches and tramp the edges firmly to prevent settling. Smooth off the surface, but do not plant anything in the bed for a few dyas because the manure in the pit may become so hot as to kill the plants.

ESSAY ON MAN, BY EDITOR, REVEALS HIS SAD FATE

When a man subscribes for the Montgomery County News, of Hilslrobo, it must be difficult to tell whether he is doing it to get a chance o readthe news of the section or merely a chance to read the many original writings of Editor Chas. W. Bliss. Here is his latest one, an "Essay on Man.''

Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of microbes.

He hoppeth out of bed in the morning and his foot is pierced with the tack of disappointment.

He sittieth down at noonday and he is stabbed in his nether anatomy by the pin of disaster.

He walketh the streets of the city in the pride and glory of his manhood and slippeth on the banana peel of misfortune and unjointeth his neck.

He smoketh the cigar of contentment and, behold, it explodeth with a loud noise, for it was loaded.

He slideth down the banisters of life and findeth them full of spinters of torture.

He lieth down to sleep at night and is stung by the mosquitos of annoyance and his frame is gnawed by the bed bugs of adversity.

What is man but a blind worm of fate?

Behold, he is impaled upon the hook of despair and furnisheth bait for the leviathan Death in the fathomless ocean of eternity.

Sorrow and travail follow him all the days of his ife.

In his infancy he is afflicted with worms and colic and in his old age he is tortured by rheumatism and ingrowing toe-nails.

What is man but a tumor on the neck of existance?

Behold, he runneth for office and the dead beat pulleth his leg ever and anon and then voteth against him.

He exalteth himself among his people and swelleth with pride, but when the votes are counted he findeth that his name is Pants.

He boasteth of his strength in Israel but is beaten by a bald-headed man from Taller Neck.

A political enemy lieth in wait for him in the market place and walketh around him crowing like unto a cock.

From the cradle to the grave man giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him.

Verily, man is but an unsightly wart on the neck of Nature, a bunion on the toe of Time, a freckle on the face of the Universe!

Healthy Children Move Along Faster in School

"It is hard to see how the idea ever got started that puny children tre brightest,' says Miss Lydia O. Jacobson, nutrition specialist, Iowa State College. "It is true that once in a while you find a valedictorian who and receive his diploma, and once in a while you find a strong upstanding fellow, who can't make a passing grade and get into high school but these are exceptions."

A recent experiment in Detroit on 80,000 children indicates that child ren who are promoted faster than the average child are in most cases above normal weight for height and for age, and children who fail to pass regularly in their school work tend to be below the normal weight for their height.

This shows that the ability to accompolishment of an individual is helped by good physical condition, and hampered by physcal weakness" says Miss Jacobson. "Give the child's mind a chance to do its best by giving him with a body properly nourished and controlled.. Let him have a quart of milk a day, whole grain cereals and bread, two or three vegetables besides potatoes, and fresh fruit or green leafy vegetables. Be sure that he is gaining a least half a pound a month."

Besides proper nutrition, he must practice hygienic living—10 to 16 hours sleep, fresh air, exercise, con panionship, and family sympathy.

No one can do good work in a room with dirty windows, poor ventilation or drus garbage around, neither can the spirit do its best in a body which sees poorly, is impeded in breathing, foulded by infection n the teeth or tonsils, and clogged by constipation.

When a mature wife bobs her hair the men wonder whether she did it because she likes bobbed hair or just to spite her husband.

BOMBING TEST FACTS HUSHED

Flyer Says Admiral Edited Statement—"Feared Ruin of Navy."

Washington. — Rear Admiral William R. Shoemaker of the navy's bureau of operations was charged before the house aircraft investigating committee with suppressing facts on the bombing of the U. S. S. Virginia by army airmen.

W. C. Shauffler, Jr., lieutenant colonel of the Army Air Service Reserve corps, in making this charge, told the committee that when the original report of the test was submitted to Admiral Shoemaker, that officer exclaimed: "It's true, every bit of it, but we can't let this get out or it would ruin the navy."

The recounting of the incident, which occurred during the bombing experiments off Cape Hatteras about two years ago, was presented by Colonel Shauffler in the form of a letter he had sent February 6 to the house military affairs committee, but which was not made public by that body.

"After the Virginia had been sunk, within a few minutes after being struck by heavy bombs dropped from the airplanes flown by army pilots, Mr. Gardner of the Aviation Magazine wrote a statement to be issued by General Pershing concerning this bombing," said the letter as read to the investigating committee.

Mr. Gardner, it was declared, submitted this statement first to General Patrick for his O. K. The statement was read over very carefully by General Patrick and O. K.'d by him. Then it was submitted to General Pershing, who stated that if the navy would O. K. it he would issue the statement over his signature.

"I happened to be sitting on the upper deck on a life-preserver box in civilian clothes when this statement was brought to Admiral Shoemaker by a junior officer of the navy construction corps, and I happened to overhear the following conversation, which I will give to you as nearly as possible, after such a long lapse of time.

"Junior Officer: 'Sir, here is a statement written by Mr. Gardner of the Aviation Magazine, O. K.'d by General Patrick and to be O. K.'d by the navy for General Pershing's signature. I would like to have you read it over and see what you think of it.'

"Admiral Shoemaker read the statement and exclaimed: 'It's true, every bit of it, but we can't let this get out or it would ruin the navy. We will have to change this some, and see if it can be put out under the general's signature the way we want it.'

"During the next fifteen minutes Admiral Shoemaker and his junior officer went over this statement, word by word, blue penciled whole lines and paragraphs, and changed the wording so that upon completion of their job there was absolutely no resemblance to the original statement written by Mr. Gardner."

Admiral Shoemaker branded Colonel Shauffler's story as "ridiculous," and announced he will ask to go before the committee.

Flames Sweep Auto Show; Loss Put at $2,250,000

Kansas City, Mo.—Fire destroyed approximately $1,500,000 worth of the latest creations of automobile manufacturers at the Kansas City motor show in the American Royal Live Stock pavilion here.

The pavilion, valued at $750,000, was declared a total loss by firemen one hour and a half after the fire was discovered in the annex of the main building. This brought the total loss to $2,250,000.

Gasoline tanks on the motor cars on display exploded and added to the intensity of the flames.

Three hundred passenger cars, representing fifty manufacturers, were on display, in addition to 100 motor trucks and 20 motor busses. There were 250 accessories booths. The exhibits also included two airplanes and a motor boat.

Slayer of Five Confesses Before Going to Gallows

Wheaton, Ill.—John Kammerer, who was hanged in the Du Page county jail at Wheaton, left his body to Dr. H. S. Hulbert for tests that might determine what led him to murder his friend, Otto Eder, and four other members of the Eder family.

The slayer's last act, as Sheriff John Hesterman was adjusting the noose about his neck, was to hand a bulky document to Assistant State's Attorney W. G. Knoch. It proved to be Kammerer's confession, made for the first time, that he slew Eder, Eder's young wife, and the three Eder children in their home.

POSTAL MEASURE IS PASSED BY THE HOUSE

Provides Pay Boost and Increase in Rates.

Washington.—The Kelly bill, providing for increases of $68,000,000 in salaries for postal employees and for increased mail rates, which are expected to add $61,222,768 annually to post-office revenues, was passed by the house under a suspension of the rules.

The bill, which was introduced by M. Clyde Kelly (Rep., Pa.), is a substitute for the Sterling-Paige bill, passed by the senate, but sent back to that body by the house on grounds that it invaded the prerogative of the lower branch in the matter of initiating revenue bills.

It provides for about $21,000,000 more in revenue than did the Sterling-Paige bill, as amended, and makes the salary increases retroactive to January 1, 1925, instead of to July 1, 1924, as specified in the senate measure.

Under the Kelly bill there is no time limit fixed for the expiration of the new rates. They become effective May 1, instead of on April 15, as provided by the Sterling bill, which made them effective only until November 15, 1926.

Fleischmann's Estate Estimated at $60,000,000

New York.—The will of Julius Fleischmann, disposing of an estate which has been estimated at $60,000,000, was filed in the surrogate's office in Mineola, L. I. Most of his fortune Mr. Fleischmann left to his children, Julius Fleischmann, Jr., and Louise Yeiser, both of whom live in Cincinnati, Ohio. Certain employees of the Fleischmann company, whose identity is said to be known only to the testator's brother, Max C. Fleischmann of Santa Barbara, Cal., one of the executors, are to receive 20,000 shares of the common stock of the company. Because of ample provision already made for her, the will left nothing to his former wife, Laura Hylan Fleischmann, who was divorced from him in Paris last August.

U. S. NEEDS MORE OF LINCOLN TYPE

Vice President-Elect Dawes Says Emancipator Was No Pussyfooter.

Chicago. — Vice President-Elect Charles G. Dawes, speaking on Abraham Lincoln at the Lions club banquet at the Congress hotel on the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the Civil war President's birth, said the trait of Lincoln that appealed to him most was the great American's quality of leadership.

"In my younger days I had always heard of Lincoln's generosity, his honesty and his mercy, the latter exemplified in his pardoning of men sentenced to be shot for some infraction of military rules during the progress of the Civil war, but I never got the picture of him that I wanted until 29 years ago. Former Governor Richard J. Oglesby, speaking on Lincoln at the Auditorium hotel at that time, gave it to me. After describing the conditions under which Lincoln grew to manhood, he said that despite the fact that Lincoln in his youth lived in a log hut, in which some of the cracks had not been chinked up, he never recognized superiority. That in my belief exemplified his quality of leadership.

"That in him which was supreme yielded to no detracting influence, however powerful. No one could ever imagine Lincoln pussyfooting around in an effort to straddle or stand on both sides of a question like some of our cowardly politicians do today. That is what has been the matter with the country today. The trouble has not lain with the American people. The people are all right. We need men who will not lie down, but men who will stand up. I have no respect whatever for the man, whatever political views he may hold, if he won't stand up and fight for his convictions if they are on the side of the Constitution.

"Lincoln possessed the unadulterated pride of American citizenship which remains as an example for us today."

Washington.—To bring two Cincinnati radio broadcasting stations to an agreement on the transmission of programs, D. B. Corson, the commissioner of navigation, and W. D. Terrell, chief of the radio section, will leave here to arbitrate the differences that have arisen.

Since then, due to a controversy between WLW and WMH, both have been broadcasting on the same wave length at the same time, creating intolerable confusion for listeners-in.

AMERICAN LEGION FUND IS GROWING

As final preparations were being made in Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky to start active work on the American Legion Endowment fund, preliminary steps were taken to extend the movement to a second group consisting of 12 states, most of them in the South. The states in the second group are: Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, West Virginia and Ohio.

At the same time it was announced that Judge Rogert W. Bingham of Louisville, editor and publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, has accepted the chairmanship of the executive committee to direct the endowment movement in Kentucky.

Stearns post, Stearns, Ky., a mining town with a population of 121, is the first Legion post in the entire country to "go over the top" in the movement. The goal for the post was set at $100. Twenty-four hours after the post learned the amount, a check for $100 was on its way to national headquarters at Indianapolis.

The first posts to send contributions for the fund to national headquarters were Eugene post, Eugene, Ore., and C. H. Berry post, Tamaqua, Penn. The Oregon post sent $75, and the other, $17.13. Adjutant Arthur S. Wolfe, of the Tamaqua post, said, "This represents the voluntary contributions from the members of this post, such contributions having been taken after each post meeting for the last few months."

Cardinal O'Connell of Boston was the first member of the national honorary committee for the fund to contribute to it. His contribution was also among the first received.

Lloyd W. Kendall, Legionnaire of Farmer City, Ill., sent a check for $5 for the fund. "I am very strong for this move," he said, "and only wish I was financially able to donate $50 or $500."

William B. Boggs, commander of the department of Panama, cabled that "the Canal Zone pledges $2,500 to the fund." The foreign departments of the Legion were given no quotas but asked to give what they could. Panama was the first to respond.

Hon. John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for President in 1924, cabled from Paris that he is glad to serve as a member of the national honorary committee for the fund. Other recent acceptances on the committee are: Mrs. Mary Lord Harrison, New York city, wife of the late President Benjamin Harrison; William Green, Washington, president of the American Federation of Labor; Otto H. Kahn, New York banker; Will H. Hays, New York city, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributers, Inc.; John R. Quinn, Los Angeles, past national commander of the American Legion; Bishop Charles H. Brent, Buffalo, chief of the chaplain service in the A. E. F.; Booth Tarkington, Indianapolis, author; V. M. Johnson, Rockford, Ill., president of Kiwanis International; James E. Chandler, imperial potentate of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; Charles Dana Gibson, New York city, artist; Gen. James A. Thomas, Dublin, Ga., commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans; Gen. John H. Dunn, Boston, commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; John Drew, New York city, actor.

Predict Veterans Will Seek State Home Care

"In a few years," predict American Legion officials of Lincoln, Neb., "World war veterans will ask admission in great numbers to state homes, and states throughout the country will have to make proper provision for them." The government has adequate facilities to care for indigent and helpless veterans at present, say the Legionnaires, but later the state will have to supplement government aid.

This prediction was made in the face of a survey revealing that there are fewer soldiers in state homes in Nebraska now than there were in 1921. Deaths among the veterans of the Civil war account for the decrease, the Legionnaires point out. Within a few years World war veterans will be clamoring to enter the state homes, they maintain.

Surplus Goes to Post

Surplus funds to the amount of more than $2,000 above the cost of the Jefferson Davis Memorial home at Memphis, Tenn., was given to the American Legion by vote of the executive committee in charge of the memorial fund

STATE TAXES MAY BE CUT

SOME FIGURES ESPECIALLY INTERESTING TO IOWA TAX PAYERS

A reduction of 2.21 mills in the state tax levy for each of the two years of the next biennium is possible if the recommendations of Budget Director E. L. Hogue are adopted by the Iowa legislature, according to the estimates in the completed report of the director.

The estimated amount necessary to be raised by direct taxation in each of the next two years is $8, 360,400, exclusive of the soldier bonus levy, which would require a state levy of 7.94 mills against a levy of 10.25 mills, collected in the years 1924 and 1925.

Need $3, 791, 025.

Reduction of soldiers' bonus bonds and interest in the next two years will require $3, 791,025. Of this amount $1,213,740 to be received from a portion of the tax on moneys and credits will be applied, making the total levy on property 9.14 mills for each of the next two years as against 11.50 in the last two years.

The estimated amount necessary to be raised by state levy for state purposes in the next two years is $28,- 272,803.40. With the soldier bonus retirement needs, the total amount necessary is estimated at $32,063,- 830.40.

Appropriations.

The appropriations recommended are for the following purposes:

State departments	$6,615,202.90
Board of control	7,689,515.30
Board of education	10,907,085.20
Perkins and Haskell-Klaus hospitals	1,800,000.00
Cushion fund for all departments	100,000.00
Uniform laws commission	1,000.00
Rockefeller foundation fund	900,000.00
Expenses of general assembly	260,000.00
Total for state purposes	$28,272,803.40
Redemption bonus bonds and interest	3,791,025.00
Total	$32,063,828.40

The taxable valuation of all property of the state is given as $1,086,- 866,550, which is one-fourth the actual valuation. The total amount of appropriations for each year of the next biennium is estimated at $14,- 130,400. This amount, less $5,500,000 in receipts from sources other than taxation, including fees received by state departments, leaves the estimated amount necessary to be raised by taxation each year as $8,360,400, which would require a levy of 7.94 mills.

For the first time in the history of Iowa the general assembly is being presented with a proposed appropriation bill which contains every appropriation which it will be necessary to make for the biennium.

The proposed bill is premised upon a budget report which contains an analysis of the state's actual expenditures over a period of six years, together with the detailed departmental requests for the ensuing biennium and the director's recommendations for the same period.

By reference to the former it will be a comparatively simple matter for any interested citizen to ascertain with complete certainty what the state proposes to spend for any and all purposes during the ensuing biennium.

DAIRYMEN PROTEST

A protest against the use of oleomargarine in Iowa state institutions was made in a resolution adopted by the Iowa Jersey Cattle club at its recent meeting at Des Moines, embodied in which was a statement that a bill was to be prepared and presented to the state legislature "protesting against purchasing and serving oleomargarine as a so-called substitute for butter."

STATE INCOME TAX PROVISIONS

The proposed bill provides an exemption of $1,000 for single persons and $2,000 for married persons, the first $1,000 to be taxed 1 per cent and each additional thousand dollars of income an additional 1 per cent until $5,000 is reached. Incomes over $5,000 would be taxed at a flat rate of six per cent.

MAYOR OPPOSES GAS TAX

Branding the proposed gasoline tax as further legislation unfair to the cities and towns of the state, W. Z. Long, mayor of Spencer, appealed by letter to the Des Moines city council to oppose the present draft of the bill.

PASSES HOSPITAL BILL

Request of the Des Moines city council for the right to issue bonds to levy a one mill tax to build a new detention hospital was approved when it passed the Goodwin bill, granting that privilege.

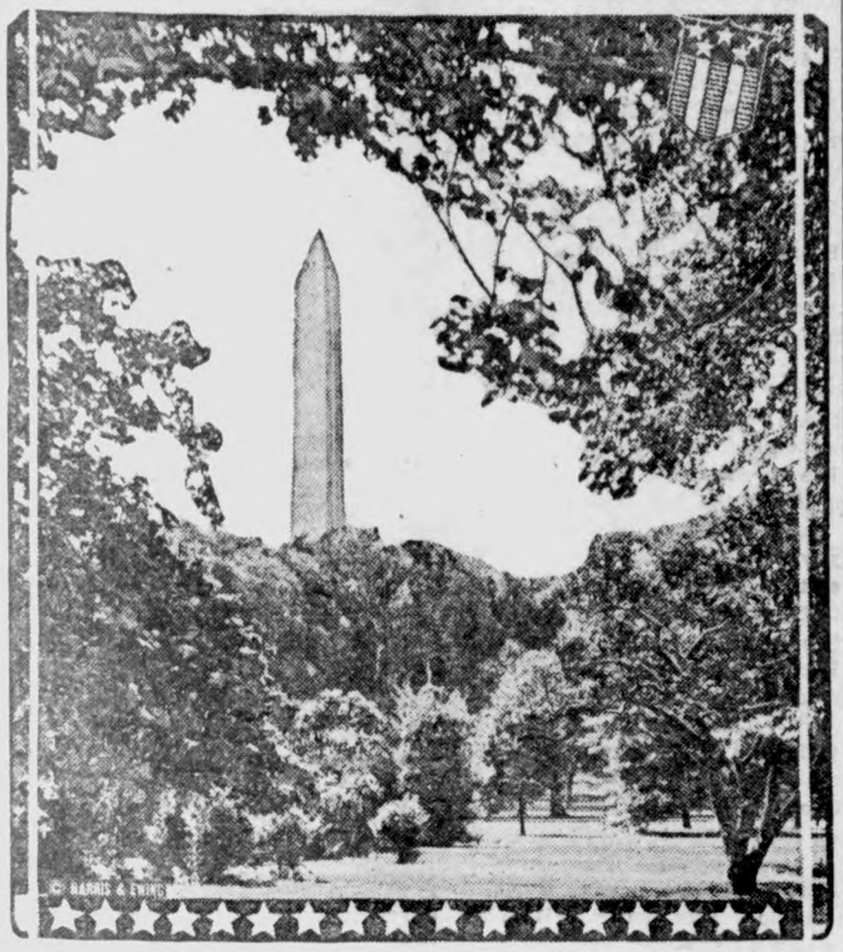
Stone from an abandoned brewery at Guttenberg is to be used for dams to deepen the Mississippi river.

The steel bridge over the Nishna river east of Sidney was swept away in an ice jam at a loss of $40,000.

After William Helman, of Iowa City testified that he had made wine just so he could "have a little drink when he wanted it," a jury returned fifty gallons of the vintage to him.

The only way the state can be bonded for a good road program is through the decision of the voters of the state. Surely the legislature is not ready to assume that the voters themselves should be denied the right and opportunity to pass on a matter which is wholly an affair of their own.

Stands in Majestic Beauty



A new photographic study of the Washington monument framed in the beautiful foliage of the monument grounds.

Washington and St. Paul's Chapel

Old New York Edifice Where Our First President Worshiped.

St. Paul's chapel, almost lost now in the maze of tall buildings that rise like a great forest in lower New York, celebrated its one hundred and fifty-eighth anniversary last year. Parishioners journeyed "all the day down" to the old church, just as its first parishioners plodded "all the way up" to its portals when they were first thrown open in 1766. Then St. Paul's was so far uptown that the selection of its site was almost a scandal.

The New York Gazette is authority for the statement that many good citizens of the day "scrupled not to comment with just severity on the folly of that visionary set of men, the vestry of Trinity church, who had put so large and ornate a building in a place so remote and sequestered, so difficult of access and to which the population could never extend." And one woman, writing to a friend, said that St. Paul's was not even in the city, but "far outside, on the banks of the Hudson."

Those were days when New York's population totaled only 20,000. Broadway wasn't even a street. It was hardly a road. Trees covered the region. Cows were milked in a barn where the towering Equitable building now stands. Not only has New York's population extended to St. Paul's since then, but it has gone so far beyond that to most of its congregation the Sunday trip to the chapel at Broadway and Vesey street is a long one downtown.

October 30, 1766, however, it meant a long walk north to those who did not have carriages. And there was not a little grumbling among those who plodded their way to the out-of-the-way chapel erected in the wheat fields of the old Anneke Jans farm.

Notable Occasion.

The dedication was quite an occasion. There was a band to supplement the vocal music of the church service, and the conductor, Mr. Tucker, got a bonus of 15 pounds for the excellent manner in which he handled the musical arrangements. Among the vestrymen who gathered in their pews for the first service were Elias Desbrosses, Joseph Reade and Andrew Barclay, all of whom now have streets named in their honor.

Dr. Samuel Auchmuty preached the sermon that morning, beaming down on a well-filled church. He was extremely popular in those days, although later this popularity was threatened. When the Revolution came, old Doctor Auchmuty remained loyal to his British king and every Sunday insisted on reading prayers for his monarch. There were protests, and finally Lord Sterling, siding with Washington, forbade the prayers. Whereupon Doctor Auchmuty shut up St. Paul's chapel, and with it Trinity and St. George's, went over to the "Jerseys" and held services within the British lines.

It was not Doctor Auchmuty who planned St. Paul's chapel. Doctor Barclay, who had been a missionary to the Mohawk Indians up where the thriving city of Newburgh, N. Y., now stands, was in charge of that work. The old Trinity, built in 1698, and St. George's, on Beekman street, both of which were later destroyed by fire, were then standing. But Doctor Barclay felt that another chapel was needed, and he carried on his campaign within the church until funds were set aside for this purpose.

He went 'way out into the fields in selecting a site for this new edifice, and perhaps for that reason he chose as his model old St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, a famous old church in what is now the heart of London, but which originally was erected in the fields, too. The corner stone was laid on May 14, 1764. Three months after that Doctor Barclay died and Doctor Auchmuty took up his work and finished the edifice. The great fire of 1776 left St. Paul's as the principal Episcopal seat of worship.

Visits of Notables.

The story of a visit to the chapel by George Washington immediately after his inauguration in New York in 1789 is often told and the first President was often a worshiper there. Governor Clinton, Benedict Arnold and many other historical figures have sat in its pews, including Edward VII of England when he was prince of Wales.

Many times have the quaint epitaphs which mark the old graveyard in the churchyard been quoted. Here stenographers and office girls who work in downtown New York gather now at the noon hour for picnic lunches. Perhaps they wonder why so many girls were named Dorcas in that distant day, as shown by the tombstones. There are no Dorcases among those bobhaired visitors of today.

In that old churchyard for many years stood the famous Washington elms, to which the first President tied his horses when he drove in his fine carriage to church. The last of those was felled in 1906, when it had become so old and decrepit that it endangered the lives of those who passed under it. It still contained the old hitching ring that Washington used, but the growth of the tree had enveloped it and it lay embedded under the bark.

Other elms had gone long since, one of them, however, not without a battle. It was a stately tree in the rear of the churchyard and for years it had been decaying. When, however, plans were made to cut it down G. P. Morris wrote in poetic wrath his famous verse, "Woodman, Spare That Tree." Thousands of persons have recited the poem without knowing the tree it was meant to save. The tree was spared for a time, according to tradition, but later it, too, came down to make room for the large church house which now stretches across the entire west end of the churchyard.

In the early part of the Nineteenth century cattle used to browse among the elms of the churchyard. There is a story, often told, that one fine Sunday a horse wandering about the near-by fields felt the urge of religion, marched into the edifice, down the aisle and right up to the pulpit, to the surprise and consternation of the congregation and the rector. But that was before lower New York was the maze of skyscrapers which cast their shadows on old St. Paul's today.

Planning to Clean Up "Back Yards" of Cities

The "back yards" of American cities and towns are to be cleaned up and made comparatively as attractive as the front yards. Investigation has developed the fact that industry and population have been lost to towns because of unattractive, or, one might say repulsive, condition along the railroad's approach. The glimpse one gets of a place through the window of a speeding train has been known to influence decisions which have resulted in serious losses. It is related that a capitalist refused to buy the bonds of a certain little city because, as he frankly admitted, the place did not look worth while to him. Asked if he had ever visited the place he said he had not and did not intend to because he had seen enough of it as he passed through on a train. Some time later he did visit the city. He expressed regret that he had libeled the place. It happens that the city is very attractive after one has got beyond the railroad tracks and the station.

The real estate men of the country are organizing a movement that will bring the beauty of American towns right down to the railroad tracks. Under the auspices of the National Association of real estate boards, the "back yards" of towns and cities are to be tidied up. Paint, whitewash and shrubbery are to be employed in the work. Ash and rubbish heaps, if they must exist, are to be screened from the eyes of the traveler. Pride in the appearance of cities' back yards is to be developed, so that in a few years America may refute the charge that its back yards are not as attractive as those of foreign countries.

Large and Small Cities Have United Interests

The larger towns and cities cannot make progress and prosper without the smaller communities and rural sections. Nor can the latter expand and succeed in achievement of the things that are worth while without general co-operative impulses from the centers of population. They are dependent one upon the other. Here lies a wide opportunity for service by the city, town and rural press through realization of their mutual interests and constructive efforts in their advancement. The closer the cities and rural sections are drawn together, both in their social and industrial relations, the better for both. Let no city publisher or country publisher imagine that he can live unto himself. He cannot. Quick communication through the automobile, rural free delivery, telephone and many other means of intimate association have made centers of population and rural communities increasingly dependent upon one another.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

House Tells Own Story

No expenditure is so important as that which you make for a home. You are to live in it for a period of years; you will see it every day, and every day your neighbors will see it. It must have the quality of strength and durability—that is, it must wear, and it must have style. The quality you want for the comfort, safety and welfare of yourself and family; the style you want to satisfy your own and their taste. Both, you want for your neighbors and even passing strangers to judge you by. The manner of the house indicates the manner of the man within. It indicates, as it were, your standing in the community; and certainly, if circumstances lead you to move elsewhere, you want in your house, as a commercial asset, both strength and beauty, for these are sure to get you a better return in rent or sale—that is, from every point of view, an attractive home will prove to be a wise investment.

Home Purchase

The South Bend (Ind.) real estate board has been making a special feature of a real estate sales plan whereby it is possible to purchase a home with a 10 per cent cash payment.

"The present efficient machinery of finance," one of their advertisements points out, "makes it possible for the buyer to start with a small sum of from $100 to $1,000 and purchase a good home ranging in price from perhaps $2,500 to $10,000."

"Just What You Make It"

Oneonta is just what you make it. If you don't like the town, you will probably find that the town doesn't like you. But if you have the right attitude, then you will find the community friendly. It is a mirror in which you will find a reflection of your disposition.—Oneonta Southern Democrat.

Good Time to Brush Up

During the leisure, dull season there are so many things that might be done to repair and paint up the old home, that would prove the best investment of the year. Don't neglect or forget this.—Talladega Home.

Home Ownership Best

A community whose units are rooted to the soil thinks twice before it indulges in industrial revolution. Home ownership breeds patience and consideration.

The cold cream is a cleansing and healing cream and leaves the skin soft. To do the most good it should be applied at night. On dry skins it may be used as a foundation for powder.

Marcelle Vanishing Cream is the better cream for daytime use and as a foundation for face powder, as it is greaseless and cannot reappear through the powder in a shine.

LIVE MONKEY "EXHIBIT A" IN SERMON ON EVOLUTION

Preacher Defies Anyone to Concede Common Ancestry With Simian.

NORFOLK, VA.,— A monkey, teth ered a few feet from the pulpit as an exhibit against the evolution theory, cast quizzical glances over anoverflowing congregation in the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday night while the Rev. Floyd T. Holland preached a sermon on "Man or Monkey." Thec limax for the congregation—and the monkey—came when he was held aloft in the pulpit a stern finger thrust toward him, and the pastor challenged anybody in the church to stand up and concede common ancestry with the simian. Nobody stood up: The minister explained that his theme, and the live exhibit from the zoo, was prompted by the introduction of a bill in the North Carolina legislature to prohibit teaching o fthe evolution theory in state supported schools.

Attendance at Tractor Short Course Averaged 75 Daily

A desire to get the most efficient service out of their tractors was evidenced by the farmers who attended the daily sessions of the tractor short course, given by the agricultural engineering department, Iowa State College during Farm and Home Week. PLENTY OF SEED CORN HERE

All of it Should Be Given Individual Ear Test, Churchil Says

Iowa has plenty of good seed corn this vear, if everybody will get busy and locate it early, says F. G. Churchill, farm crops specialist, Iowa State College. All of it should be given the individual ear test howev-

Seed corn gathered in September or October and properly stored is testing from 85 to 90 percent strong according to tests at the experiment station and farmers' institutes, while crib corn in many localities is very poor, testing only from 35 to 50 percent strong.

Indications point to a big demand for seel corn at a fair price, and a fair price Mr. Churchil defines as one which ranges from double the market value of corn to $5 a bushel. The present price of corn on the market and the realization that this years crib corn is not good enough for seed, are factors making for the large demand for seed corn this year

HOUSEHOLD CONVENIENCE

When a baby needs a bottle at night the usual method is for the mother to rise and heat the mikl on the gas stove.

There is a more convenient way. Attach the electric percolator to the outlet beside the bed. Prepare the bottle when retiring and place in cold water in the percolator. Then when it is needed it is only necessary to reach out and attach the plug. The percolator heats very quickly and is deep enough so that the bottle can be almost immersed in the water.

GIFTS FROM FAR EAST FOUND IN SUB-BASEMENT

The state department has rescued from its tempory wartime quartesr in a sub-basement a collection of rare gifts from the American government and good will offerings.

Swords from Japan and Siam, stone from the Great Wall of China, relics from Korea, and rare embroideries are in the collection. Miscellan documentary material and objects of art, now in the keeping of the state department would, in the opinion of the officials, be value' in the millions of dollars if offered for sale

The swords from Japan seem to have been brought here by the first mission from Japan in 1860, when ratifications of the treaty of 1858 were exchanged. These gifts corresponded, it is believed with those that Commodore Perry took with him to Japan. When the treaty with Korea was ratified here, the members of the mission from that country brot presents with them. The Japanese mission of 1872 likewise brought gifts.

Congress may be asked to make provision by appropriation for the proper care of these articles.

HOW THE IOWA FARM FAMILY'S DOLLAR IS SPENT

$900 Worth of the Things the Family are Secured in Town

Only two-fifths of the life necessities of the Iowa farm family is furnished by the home place, according to an estimate by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute based on a recent survey of 700 typical corn state farms. The survey brought out the fact that over $900 worth of the things the family eats, wears or uses in the home had to be secured in town.

Food rent and fuel were practically the only items directly provided wholly or in part by the farm in the areas studied, the Institute states. Approximately 26 cents of each dollor spent by the farm family was shared in by thec lothier, dry goods man, shoe dealer and milliner. Another 23 cents was divided between the grocer and the butcher, while auto upkeep and depreciation, coal and other running expenses cut another slice of 21 cents from the farm family's dollar.

A dime of each dollar spent by the farmer went into school expenses, reading matter, club and lodge dues, vacation trips, and church support, the survey further revealed. The doctors, the dentist, druggist and the nurse, together received 7 cents out of the dollar bill, while 4 cents were expended on household goods and for sewing, laundry and canning equipment. Life and health insurance for the members of the farm family used up another four cents, four pennies more went into gifts, tobacco, candy, shaves and the remaining cent was spent for miscellaneous items.

These facts indicate a close relationship between farm income and the money the farm family spends in town, states the Institute. There are distinct signs that the farming ndustry is lifting itself out of the valley of depression but the [illegible] the average farmer today have not yet reached the level of many ines of business. Recent published statements that the average Iowa farmer's income for 1924 was $2989 referred to the gross sales income as based on government figures, from which must be deducted taxes, interest, equipment, depreciation, feed fertilizer, hired labor, etc. to make it comparable to net profits as figured in other industries.

YOUTHS GET 10 YEAR SENTENCE FOR STEALING WINE

Took Liquor in Farmers Cellar

VINTON—Lonnie Dickerson, 18 of Belle Plaine, and Henry Kissel, Jr. 20, of Keystone, were taken to the Anamosa reformatory, to begin serving indeterminate sentences no tto exceed 10 years for stealing wine from the cellar of Willian Schuldt, farmer of near Keystone. Both entered a plea of guilty. Judge James Willet said the sentences were severe but he thought they would be better off in the reformatory than in county jail for a year, He adder that he intended to help obtain a parole. Dickerson's young wife is soon to become a mother. The boys said they had no intention of committing burglary, only desiring a drink of wine.

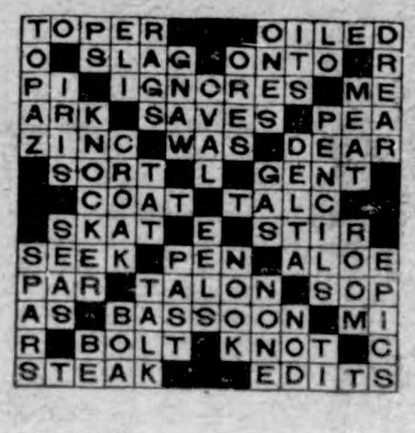
ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE



INAUGRAL ADDRESS TO BE BROADCAST

Gold Metal Station, one of Twelve . . Stations to Broadcast Ceremony

For the first time in history the innauguration of a President will be broadcast by radio, when on the morning of March 4th all America will tune in.

The Gold Meta Station, WCCO, is included in a list of twelve outstanding radio stations over the country which will broadcast the cermony and inaugral address of President Coolidge. The hour is set for 10:20 a. m., Central Standard time, and it is expected that the program will last approximately two hours. Preceding the start of the ceremonies, the Gold Metal station will broadcast patriotic organ music from the State Theatre, Minneapolis.

Every school child in the Twin cities 170,000 of them, will hear the ceremonies right in school, as both public and parachial school authorities in St. Paul and Minneapolis have agreed to suspend classes during the ceremonies. The Northwest Radio Trade Association has agreed through its members to provide, install and supervise the opreation of receiving sets in every school in the Twin Cities, over 200 in all.

With the announcement made thro the press that WCCO would participate in the broadcast, a flood of letters from all over the northwest started pouring into the Gold Metal Station, asking for complee details. Among them are a number from public school authorities who see in this even an oppertunity to instill in the heart of young Americ the significance of a Presidential inauguration.

It is expected that public gatherings will be hed all over the Northwets during the ceremonies, whe. e people by means of radi oreceivers may hear the solemn ceremony of inducting President Coolidge into the highest office within the gift of the Amercan people.

In homes, stores, factores, church schools, theatres and other public places over the Northwest will be gathered the largest audience that has ever listened to the radio.

The problem of carrying the ceremonies by dierect telephone wires to WCCO requires engineering skill of the highest type and the arrangement of special facilties all along the 1500 miles that sounds must travel over the wire to the new 5000 watt sending station of WCCO, the completion of which has been rushed to insure to the northwest an equal opportunity with the East to participate this great event. It sis expected that with the increased power of the new station, which swings into action on that day, that all portions of the Northwest will receive the program clearly.

The ceremonies will be picked up by microphones at the capitol by the telephone company and transmitted by long distance lines to various broadcasting stations over the country and those in turn will send them out into the air.

51 DIE IN INDIANA COAL MINE BLAST

Workers Lose Lives When Miner's Lamp Ignites Gas in Sullivan Shaft.

Sullivan, Ind.—In an explosion of gas that wrought the greatest mine disaster in the history of Indiana coal fields, 51 men are believed to have been killed almost instantly in the City Coal company mine on the outskirts of this city. Sixteen bodies have been recovered and identified.

There were 121 miners in the mine at the time of the blast, which occurred in the third and fourth entries north, where most of the men were at work who were killed.

Rescue crews went to work at once, and the rescue team of the United States bureau of mines at Vincennes reached the scene of the disaster by motor truck one hour after the terrific explosion. They were on the bottom within thirty-five minutes after arrival.

Miners who explored the workings said an explosion followed by a small fire had brought sudden death. The bodies brought up were covered with burns. Some were killed by falling timbers.

Preliminary investigation indicated that a miner working with a cutting machine suddenly cut through to an old mine shaft. The rush of accumulated gas from the opening was ignited by the miner's lamp.

Tremendous crowds thronged the scene soon after the word of the disaster spread throughout the town and surrounding communities, and automobiles were parked along the roads leading to the scene for several miles.

Wives and children of miners employed in the shaft crowded about, seeking information, and groups of wailing, sobbing women and children clustered about as the news was broken that 51 of the men were known to be dead.

A signal to the hoisting engineer was received within three minutes after the explosion, but one of the cages was caught on the bottom by wreckage and miners were forced to climb into the shaft to the bottom and cut away the wreckage before the hoisting engine could be used. But one cage was being used as a result in the work of bringing the bodies to the surface. A row of waiting ambulances removed the dead to the city.

Courage and heroism marked the work of rescuers who braved the deadly fumes of gas and descended time after time into the mine to bring out the dead.

Elmer Davidson, one of the miners at the scene of the explosion, was found by rescue workers in the main entry shortly after the blast and was brought to a Sullivan hospital. He was unconscious for several hours.

The disaster brought to a standstill all other activities in this city. Efforts of citizens were directed toward alleviation of the suffering of families bereaved by the tragedy.

The Business and Professional Women's club took charge of the relief at the mine shaft and erected tents in which to shelter the families who waited. Arrangements were made by these women to serve food to the rescue parties.

Mine officials disclosed that the entire 51 men workers in the immediate vicinity of the explosion were believed to have been killed almost instantly.

Officials of the City Coal company mine issued a statement declaring that the 51 miners trapped in the section of the mine where the explosion occurred are believed to be dead. They are:

Harry Anderson, mine foreman; Ellis Eaton, P. J. Dunning, Everett Metcalf, John Collins, Frank Cottingham, James Burris, James Eller, Emile Lecocq, Charles McCammen, W. M. Moberley, James Boyle, Everett Keller, James Miller, Dwight McClanahan, Frank Mason, Dan Purcell, Claude Trader, Earl Laughlin, Oliver Keagy, Mike Cusack, John Neal, Robert Freeman, Harry Gorby, Cecil Carty, Wayne Walters, Phil Walters, John Row, Frank Hawhee, John Brown, Gilbert Taylor, R. J. Jackson, Ross Booth, John Thomas, Charles Sheedy, Clinton Higgenbottom, Harry Maxwell, Frank Smith, John A. Ward, Silas Wagner, Earl Robertson, Pearl Hawhee, Blaine Gibson, Johmn Salmon, John Baird, Arthur Sullivan, Russell Dowdy, Max Robertson, Claude Sanders, Dave Smith.

In the hideous turmoil at the pit head there was a moment of stark tragedy when Mrs. Etta Sanders, ninety-seven years old, recognized her son Claude among the dead. The feeble woman, supported by other children, had waited at the mine since noon, scanning every face. As she watched doctors lift the body into an ambulance, his mother collapsed and was taken to a hospital.

DR. M. L. BURTON, HEAD OF U. OF M., IS DEAD

Noted Educator Succumbs After Long Illness.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Dr. Marion LeRoy Burton, president of the University of Michigan, died here.

Doctor Burton had been seriously ill since early autumn, but was supposed to be improving. A sudden change in his condition was diagnosed by his physician as streptococcus pleurisy.

The educator's system had been greatly weakened by a throat operation last November 4, at which time an abscess was removed.

President Burton was one of the younger among the executive heads of big American universities. He had been at Michigan for nearly five years.

Last June at the Republican national convention in Cleveland he made the speech nominating Coolidge for President and stirred that rather decorous assemblage with his fluent, rapid-fire eloquence. He had been chosen for the task by Mr. Coolidge himself, who was a personal friend in the days when Coolidge was at home in Northampton, Mass., and Burton was president of Smith college there.

President Burton was fifty years old last August. He was a native of Iowa, grew up a farmer's boy, and found his way to Minneapolis, where, in a measure, he was dependent on self-support. His widow and two children survive.

TAX CUT IS URGED ON INHERITANCE

Coolidge Says Present Rate Approaches Confiscation in Some Cases.

Washington. — President Coolidge recommended for public consideration greater economy in tax collection and gradual withdrawal of the federal government from the inheritance tax field. The recommendations were made in an address at the opening of the National Tax association's national inheritance tax and estate tax conference here.

The present federal inheritance tax was condemned by Mr. Coolidge, who declared that in some instances it, with the state levies, "closely approaches, if it is not actually, confiscation."

"If we are to adopt socialism, it should be presented to the people of this country as socialism, and not under the guise of a law to collect revenue," he said.

"The people are quite able to determine for themselves the desirability of a particular public policy and do not ask to have such policies forced upon them by indirection."

Mr. Coolidge said that establishment of economy in income of revenue is an equal necessity with economy in outgo of revenue. He added that the first field of practice of economy in inheritance tax collection lies in cooperation of the states.

Saying that there is "competition between states to reach in inheritance taxes not only the property of its own citizens but the property of citizens of other states," the President, by way of illustration, showed how a share of stock, on the death of its owner, might be made subject to seven different and separate inheritance taxes by the federal and various state governments.

"All this means," he added, "not only an actual amount of tax which may under particular circumstances exceed 100 per cent of the value of the stock, but the expense, delay and inconvenience of getting clearances of the states which claim a right to tax the property is a serious burden to the heir who is to receive the stock.

"Particularly is this expense disproportionate to a tax paid by a small estate, which has but a few shares of stock. In many cases the expense alone must exceed the total value of the shares which it is sought to transfer."

Scrapping of Naval Ships Is Completed

Western Cattle Raisers See Shortage of Meat by Fall

New York.—Higher beef and not much of it was seen by a delegation of cattle raisers and farmers from Texas, Kansas, Missouri and Illinois, when they addressed financiers of Wall street at a luncheon of the Bankers' club. The Westerners brought word that the American housewife will have to go to market with a smaller basket and a larger pocketbook by next September because of the herd dispersal during the postwar slump. The visitors seemed agreed that the national meat shortage threatens to become so acute by fall that it may cost North America its position in world markets as a meat producer.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

COLORADO'S TYPE OF SOLDIER BOYS

John Charles Vivian, attorney of Golden, Colo., now commander of the Colorado department of the American Legion, got tired of governmental red tape during the war. He decided to do a little unraveling himself. He had been under consideration for a commission as major in the judge advocate's department. But the matter hung fire. The commission did not come.

So one day he enlisted as a private in the marines. On the same day that he closed up his law books, his younger brother, Chauncey H. Vivian, then editor of the Boulder (Colo.) News-Herald, dropped the editorial shears, jabbed the brush into the paste-pot and enlisted also—as a private in the marines.

The brothers served together, the younger brother as a private in the squad of which the older was corporal.

John Charles Vivian.

They were discharged together. Later on they were during the same year commander of their respective posts of the Legion.

The new department commander has been chairman of various departmental committees. He has been alternate national executive committeeman for Colorado and chairman of the rehabilitation committee for District 11.

Mr. Vivian, who was born at Golden in 1887, was a newspaper reporter while he was studying in the University of Colorado from 1905 to 1911. Then he became state editor of the Denver Times in 1911-1912. He received the degree of Bachelor of Laws from the University of Denver in 1913.

Since his graduation he has held various civil offices. He was special counsel to the city attorney of Denver in 1913-1914. He was federal food administrator for Jefferson county in 1918. He later became city attorney of Golden and county attorney of Jefferson county.

Will Seek Amendment to Compensation Act

Declaring that the provision of the adjusted compensation act is unjust which requires a wife, child or parent of a deceased veteran to show dependency at the time of the veteran's death in order to collect the compensation in case the soldier had not filed application for insurance, officials of the Wisconsin department of the American Legion will launch a campaign to have the law amended.

Under the present law, if a veteran dies before filing a claim for insurance, only a wife, child or parent can collect in the order named and the claimants are required to show that they were dependent upon the veteran at the time of his death. Efforts will be made to have the law changed so that the three classes of claimants can collect regardless of dependency.

Not a Kick!

"I just stopped in to tell you," began the man at the complaint desk of the gas company, "That my gas stove blew up yesterday."

"Tell your troubles to a plumber," growled the surly clerk. "That's no fault of ours—you got no kick here."

"Oh, I'm not kicking," replied the customer cheerfully, as he opened the door. "Only I thought I'd tell you that your blamed old slot meter backfired at the same time, and I haven't been doing anything but pick up silver quarters all over the cellar ever since. Good day!"—American Legion Weekly.

Cleaning Up the Mess

Brown, during the absence of his wife, was giving a stag party. Bottles, dishes and cigar butts were scattered about in profusion. At the height of the revelry Brown was called to the door, and came back with a telegram in his hand.

"Boys," he cried in consternation, "It's from my wife. She'll be home in an hour. What'll we do?"

There was a moment of stunned silence and then Smith jumped up.

"I have it!" he shouted. "Let's burn the house down!"—American Legion Weekly.

How Robert M. Koenig Found Remedy for Pimply Skin

For years my skin would break out every once in a while—and ointments did very little to help me.

I read a doctor's article stating that pimply skin usually comes from the stomach—and bowels not getting rid of the poisons.

I tried Carter's Little Liver Pills for a few days—and since that time my skin is smooth and clear. Now I take my friends the right way of getting rid of a broken out skin—and also of steering clear of upset stomach and sick headache. Carter's are all you claim for them.

FLOYD COLLINS, THE CAVE VICTIM

Portrait of Floyd Collins, who was found dead in Sand cave, near Cave City, Ky., and whose attempted rescue engaged the frantic attention of hundreds of persons and interested the entire country.

FLOYD COLLINS DISCOVERED DEAD IN KENTUCKY CAVE

Rescuers Reach Entombed Man After Seventeen Days of Heroic Efforts, Only to Find Life Extinct.

Cave City, Ky.—After seventeen days of heroic efforts, rescuers finally found the dead body of Floyd Collins, Kentucky cave explorer, who was trapped in Sand cave when a huge boulder pinioned his leg.

Workmen finally fought their way down to Floyd through the muck and slime and boulders and solid limestone of his tomb, but they were too late. He was dead. Starvation, thirst, exposure and acute physical exhaustion had done their work.

Rigor mortis had set in, and doctors who went within ten feet of him and made their observations through Edward Brenner, catlike little miner, hanging head down in a manhole cut in a limestone ledge, agreed that the end had come more than twenty-four hours before.

Body Cased in Silt.

And Nature, whose forces Floyd defied time and again in his continual search for the beautiful cavern which might draw sightseers from the ends of the earth and make him rich, had been day by day tightening the unbreakable clutch in which she seized him. Only his foot was fast at first, but when they reached him mud and silt and small boulders had filtered through the crevices above him and formed a solid sheath about his lifeless form.

Electric Bulb Was Cold.

There were no sounds from the patient, no respiration, no movement of any kind. The electric light that was placed by the early rescuers on Collins' neck was found around at the top of his chest. The bulb was out.

"What was the cause of death, doctor?" someone asked Doctor Hazlitt.

"He died from exhaustion; acute physical exhaustion, exposure, starvation and thirst," Doctor Hazlitt replied, and Doctor Francis confirmed the opinion with a nod.

Explored Caves From Boyhood.

Floyd Collins had been a cave explorer since he was a little boy. He was born on a farm five miles from Sand cave, where the Collins family still lives, and as nearly as his father can remember Floyd has seldom been away from the cave country.

When just big enough to handle a plow, his mule one day sank to his knees in what has since been known as Mule cave and Floyd's cave enthusiasm was started.

Some of those among the early rescuers who talked with Floyd said he described his new-found cavern as the most beautiful I have ever seen."

With the finding of Collins' lifeless form it was realized that Collins' dream of three weeks ago was a presentiment which had come true.

"I dreamed I was caught in rock and the angels came and took me away," he had told his stepmother, Mrs. Jane Collins, three weeks ago, after having announced to her that he had before him two days of the most dangerous cave exploring he had ever attempted. Mrs. Collins had urged Floyd to abandon his intentions to explore Sand cave.

Doctors Find Collins Dead.

Doctor Hazlett and Doctor Francis, who went down in the cave after Collins' body was found by the rescuers, made the following statement:

"We found we were both too large to lower ourselves down to Collins' body," Doctor Hazlett said; and Doctor Francis nodded approval. "Brenner then went down head first, his head just above the face of the victim.

"We were four or five feet behind Brenner and instructed him what to do to determine with certainty whether Collins were alive or dead.

"We asked him to feel of the face. 'How does he feel?' we asked Brenner; and he replied: 'He is cold all over, as much of him as I can feel.'

"Then we told him to feel just in front of the ear for a sign of Collins' pulse. He did that for a moment.

"'Can you lift the eyelid?' we asked;

"He was silent trying hard for a moment, then he replied: 'No, I can't feel it.'

"We asked him whether he could get at Collins' wrist and he said, after trying, that he could.

Unable to Feel Wrist Pulse.

"We instructed him just where to feel for the beating of the pulse on the wrist, and he again said he could detect not the slightest movement.

"'Feel his eyes and tell us about them,' we instructed.

"He did it and said they were sunken away in.

"'Can you lift the eyelid? we asked; and then: 'Lift his eyelid and shine your light in his eye.'

"Brenner tried hard to do it; but at last he turned to us and said the eyes were too far sunken; he couldn't make it.

"He said he could not get his hand down on Collins' chest, that that was all covered with sand and boulders, tightly wedging him in. We now asked him to shine his light in Collin's face and describe it. He said there was a small red mark on the cheek, which we feel certain must have come from some pressure.

Electric Bulb Was Cold.

"There are no sounds from the patient, no respiration, no movement of any kind. The electric light that was placed by the early rescuers on Collins' neck was found around at the top of his chest. The bulb was out."

"What was the cause of death, doctor?" some one asked.

"He died from exhaustion; acute physical exhaustion, exposure, starvation and thirst," Doctor Hazlett replied, and Doctor Francis confirmed the opinion with a nod.

"The sunken eyes denote that; the rigidity of the jaw, which is immobile, indicates rigor mortis has set in—the rigidity of death."

The physicians were asked how long, in their opinion, Collins had been dead.

They consulted a moment together, then Doctor Hazlett replied:

"Rigor mortis seldom sets in at least 12 hours after death, and usually not until 24 hours after death. We have no hesitancy in saying that from the condition of the body, as described to us by Mr. Brenner, that Collins has been dead at least 24 hours."

Father Told Son Is Dead.

Just as the report was made that Collins had been found dead, his aged father, Lee Collins, alighted from an automobile on his return to the scene from Cave City.

The old man was taken down to the mouth of the shaft, and there Doctor Hazlett told him as gently as possible the sad truth. Tears filled the father's eyes, and he bowed his head silently for a moment.

He apparently is a man of deep religious conviction, for although he wept softly and steadily and choked up continually as he talked, he appeared to resign himself to the tragedy that has fallen upon him.

"Well," he said, with a throb in his voice, "it's a consolation to know that he's with the angels. Those were his last words to his brother, Homer, you know. When Homer went down there the last time he said, 'Homer, if the men don't get me out of here, the angels will. Yes, the angels will get me out if the men don't, so don't you worry.'

"That was his dream coming true. He had dreamed a dream like he was caught in the cave like that just two days before he went down that last time.

A Vision of Death's Claws.

"He said it was like some great big claws reached out and caught hold of him and then suddenly he found angels all around him. It seemed sort of vaguely as though he was caught in the cave, just like he was, and the angels brought him out."

Now he made a palpable effort to straighten up and seemed to succeed. When he was composed he concluded: "I can never thank the world or that millionaire lady in Chicago enough for all they have done for me. You know, that millionaire lady in Chicago, she done sent Doctor Hazlett down here to help Floyd.

"Floyd guided her through one of the caves once, may have been Mammoth or Crystal cave, I don't know; but she remembered it and when she read he was in trouble, hung up down in there, she sent the doctor to try and save him. (He was referring to Mrs. Emmons Blaine of Chicago.)

"I want to thank the world for what they've all done. I can never forget Mr. Carmichael."

Stepmother Is Stricken.

There was great grief when Mrs. Serilla Buckingham Collins, stepmother of the boy, learned of his death. Mrs. Collins has been ill for several days and the news made her weep.

"I begged him not to go down there that last time," she said. "I begged and begged him, but he said that his past efforts had been dangerous and that he was not going to let them have been in vain. Oh, if I could only have kept him at home that last day!"

Then Mrs. Collins told again of the angel dream that Floyd had two nights before he was entrapped.

"He also told me of the extreme dangers of this cave. He said that he had two or three more days of work to do and that they were the most hazardous labors of his whole career in the caves. It was then I begged him not to try it, but he persisted, and—Oh! If I could only have kept him home that last day."

Great Words From a Great Man.

And Carmichael, the dauntless, tireless builder, who sunk the great rescue shaft in such a short, desperate effort to bring out a live man, observed in his quiet way:

"While I have always thought the world was composed of pretty respectable people, it took this experience to bring it home to me that just about 99 per cent of the human race is pure gold."

And on the building of the shaft, no word for his part, but everything for the men he commanded:

"Starting as we did with a grapevine, no organization, I want to say after about twenty-odd years in construction work that I have never even heard of a job done with as few hitches by volunteer labor—never saw a set of men anywhere who gave more generously and whole heartedly of themselves, body and soul, from the lowest water boy to the man ready to take his A. B. in college."

Carmichael now started to walk slowly up the winding pathway that leads to the top of the cliff.

"Where are you going?" somebody asked; and he turned with a smile and in his quiet intonations replied:

"Guess I'll go see if I can find Mrs Carmichael and ask her how the six months-old kid is getting along."

Royal Visit Almost Resulted in Tragedy

Here is a yarn concerning a shah of Persia who created a sensation in England in the early seventies, when Sir Edward Watkin, the railway magnate, and his staff narrowly escaped decapitation.

It appears that the royal carriages were used for the first time for a few years on the initial journey made by the shah from Folkestone to London. No sooner had the train speeded up than the axles, overheated, ignited the woodwork beneath the saloons.

To ensure the safety of the royal guests, Sir Edward was traveling by the same train, and he was horrified to see, as they passed through the stations crowded with cheering people, the shah's staff hanging from the windows and doors flourishing drawn swords and trying, fortunately, in vain, to cut off all heads within reach. The train was stopped, and the fire—the cause of this bloodthirsty demonstration—located and quenched. Another carriage was procured, and the shah landed safely in London.

This is one of numerous good yarns on many subjects and personages included in Furniss' well of anecdote "Some Victorian Men."

GASOLINE TAX MAY BE DEFEATED

FEDERAL AID MAJOR CONCERN IN CHANGING ROAD LAWS

The programs of both highway and banking legislation to be considered by the forty-first Iowa legislature remains in formative stages at the end of the first five weeks of the session, and there are many indications that each will be brought slowly to final action.

Many proposals for changing each group of laws have been submitted; but there are many minds on what actually should be done and the whole situation in both instances is really a tangled one. It is likely that the time between now and the spring recess, March 4, will be devoted to shaping the two programs for floor action when the legislature reconvenes.

Thus far, the senate has tackled the banking program mainly by passing the bill repealing the preference accorded public deposits and giving the bank deposit guaranty bill a chance at passage by advancement to the calendar over objection of the banking committee.

Attention to Gasoline Tax.

The house has not acted on either bill; but it has passed a bill providing for reorganization of closed banks without consent of every depositor.

Most of the attention given the highway program to date has been devoted to the gasoline tax and there is yet no definite indication of what may be done about the proposed tax, for there are varying proposals in bills introduced in both houses and others are being considered by the house committee drafting a bill.

The gasoline tax proposal, however, does not go to the seat of the highway problem, for the major concern is whether this legislature will change its highway laws to meet the demands of the federal government and insure Iowa's continued receipt of federal aid. Until a bill proposing such changes, now being drafted by highways subcommittees, comes before the legislature, the start on highway legislation cannot really be said to have been made.

The Governor's Message.

Governor Hammill, in a message on the condition of Iowa roads and what, in his opinion, is necessary to insure continued progress in road construction, read in both houses took a definite stand midway between the recommendations of the Iowa Good Roads association and the group in the legislature which stands for no change in road laws except perhaps enactment of a gasoline tax law, provided it is made a replacement tax.

The governor advocated state control of the primary system and abolition of the present system of county allotment of the primary road fund. These two proposals are regarded as the keystone of the arch of the whole legislative program, for action on them will determine whether Iowa's road building is to be regarded as a state problem or continue as the problems of ninety-nine counties.

FAVOR GAS TAX

Virtually all of the house members are said to be friendly to the gasoline tax.

LEGAL AID FOR POOR

The furnishing of free legal aid for the poor is the goal which the Des Moines Federation of Women's Clubs has set for itself during the coming year.

WOULD LICENSE BEAUTY SHOPS

Walt Whitman said: "The habit of thrift proves your power to rule your own self. You are able to take care of yourself and then out of the excess of your strength you produce a surplus. REFORMS IN STATE SUPERVISION OF BANKS AS ADVOCATED BY BANKERS

By FRANK W. SIMMONDS
American Bankers Association

ALTHOUGH many states have unexcelled systems of bank supervision by public authority, in some instances political entanglements have resulted in lax methods and dangerous practices. Public opinion today demands that bank supervision be as free from partisan interference as the judiciary itself.

Frank W. Simmonds

State banking laws are increasing in number and diversity. Much thought and study has been given by the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association to uniformly efficient supervision. It is on record as urging that the office of Bank Commissioner be freed from entangling politics and divorced from all other functions of state government; that the tenure of office be made more secure and lasting, with sufficient compensation and discretionary power to attract men of outstanding executive ability and successful banking experience, and that bank examiners be selected from those having the requisite qualifications.

A careful study and survey of state bank supervision has been made with the cooperation of State Bank Commissioners and state bankers to bring out the high lights of successful supervision and at the same time indicate remediable weaknesses, as the basis for formulating a model code of law dealing with bank supervision, and also for developing public opinion in favor of its general adoption.

This survey shows that in forty-one states Bank Commissioners are appointed by the governors and generally hold office "during their pleasure." In two states they are chosen by popular election, in others they are chosen by a banking board, but in only a few is the advice of organized banking considered. In Mississippi the selection is made by a convention of delegates from the state chartered banks.

Long Terms Make Bureaucrats

The term of office was found to range from two years to six. The majority of recommendations favor a five-year term, reasoning that a long term of life tenure tended toward bureaucracy in office, while a short term was condemned on the grounds that the Bank Commissioner would scarcely have time to become thoroughly conversant with his field of work before the expiration of his term of service and the public would lose the fruits of his experience. A five year term is long enough to permit his rendering useful service through capitalizing his experience and then if he is found capable the chances of his reappointment would be strong.

It was found that duties other than bank supervision are frequently imposed on the banking department, ranging from insurance matters to irrigation projects and even state hail insurance. The almost unanimous expression of opinion is that the position of bank commissioner is a task of such outstanding importance as to demand that he devote all his time and attention strictly to problems of bank supervision and regulation.

Some states impose no statutory qualifications whatever for Bank Commissioner. A number merely require that he have nominal qualifications, in many cases purely negative. Only twenty states require actual banking experience varying from one to five years.

Powers of Bank Commissioners

In the majority of states, the Bank Commissioner is given more or less power to approve or deny applications for charters of state banks. Clearly this authority should be exercised chiefly with a view to supplying each community with safe, adequate banking facilities. Hence the importance of carefully weighing all factors involved such as the character and responsibility of the organizers and the community's needs for banking facilities. In the very nature of things no one is so well qualified to pass on charter questions as the Bank Commissioner. Comments from all states favor granting the banking department large if not absolute jurisdiction in granting bank charters.

A number of states now confer more or less complete authority on the state banking department to act as receiver in liquidating failed banks, usually providing that the Bank Commissioner must file a report with the court for approval. In other states the court names a receiver and the Bank Commissioner thereafter has no jurisdiction or authority. The almost unanimous opinion of bankers and the Bank Commissioners is that authority should be placed in the banking department as it permits the employment of experienced bank administrators in winding up the affairs of a bank, is more expedient, economical and altogether more satisfactory.

Changes Needed

The consensus as to changes needed to strengthen the work of the state banking departments is summarized in the following recommendations:

1. Provide adequate salaries.
2. Give Bank Commissioner large discretionary power in granting charters and enforcing bank regulations.
3. Remove the office from partisan politics by providing for election or nomination of the Commissioners by the bankers.
4. Provide for a sufficient number of examiners, with adequate pay, and free their appointment from politics.
5. Give the Banking Department full authority to act as receiver in the case of failed banks.
6. Make Bank Commissioners' terms five years.
7. Make requirements for Bank Commissioner eligibility not less than five years of successful banking experience and well recognized executive ability.

Bank supervision, when wisely and impartially administered, is capable of rendering one of the highest types of service a state can give its people.

Alexandrian Pharos

Pharos was the name of an island in the harbor of Alexandria. Here Ptolemy I, who had been one of the generals of Alexander the Great, decided to build a gigantic lighthouse. The work was finally completed during the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus. The structure was 450 feet high and 100 feet square at the base. At the summit was kept a beacon fire which, according to the historian, Josephus, could be seen over forty miles away. Part of this famous lighthouse was blown down in the Eighth century. The ruin was completed by earthquakes in 1303 and 1346.

Quick to Learn

A couple of years ago Ted Winkley was an enthusiastic graduate from the school of journalism at a western university. He bought a country weekly and settled down to reform the county. The first issue of the paper brought out under his control flamed with promising announcements. The dean of the school of journalism received a copy and read this editorial announcement:

"We aim to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

Nearly a year later the dean received another copy of the boy's paper, with this proclamation circled with blue pencil:

"We aim to tell the truth—but not so blamed much of it as heretofore!"—Harper's Magazine.

When Liberty Party Figured in Politics

The Liberty party was organized in 1844, and its candidate for the Presidency in the campaign of that year was James G. Birney, originally of Kentucky, but then of New York. Birney was editor of the Philanthropist, an abolitionist journal of that day, who organized the Liberty party and named himself as its candidate. Like other "personally conducted" parties, its life was brief. In the campaign of 1848 it was merged into the Free Soil party and later that and such remnants of the Whig party as were left were absorbed by the new Republican party says the Detroit News.

The election of 1844 was interesting because of several circumstances. It was a time of violent argument, of high feeling, and was marked by many and strange changes in alignment. It marked, too, the last appearance of Clay as a candidate for the Presidency, when he polled his largest vote and came within 38,000 votes of defeating Polk and achieving his life's ambition. Clay was a candidate in 1820, again in 1832, and for the last time, after twenty years' trying for the unobtainable, in 1844.

How Lawyer Summed Up Town's Officials

There dwelt down East a quaint old character, "Lawyer Hopkins," whose notion of the divine origin and character of justice was certainly modern in its practicality. He occasionally practiced law in a small way and in a manner peculiarly his own.

On one occasion a flock of sheep disappeared and their heads were found in a flour barrel in the barn of a certain man, who was thereupon arrested and tried for sheep stealing. Lawyer Hopkins, in conducting the defense, maintained that the sheep were not stolen, but had strayed away, as was common in the spring.

The prosecuting attorney said: "Yes, I know sheep do stray away this time of year, but they do not usually leave their heads in flour barrels in the haymow."

Hopkins went to a neighboring town to settle the case with the selectman, but failed, and gave this report, characterizing the three town officials:

"Mr. A—— will do nothing wrong if he knows it; Mr. B—— will do nothing at all if he knows it, and Mr. C—— will do nothing right if he knows it."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Ancient Custom

"There's a chap I've been in a quandary about for a year," said a man, indicating another who had just passed. "I don't know whether I like him. You see, he has a prejudice against shaking hands. He just naturally won't if there is a possible chance of getting out of it. He always manages to have something else to do when a person to whom he is introduced gets ready to extend the glad hand. That chap says that handshaking is a survival of an ancient custom that has no reason for existing today. He insists if there is anything he dislikes it is to grasp some stranger's moist paw and give it a shake, for when he does so he wants to sneak away and wash his own. I've heard him expatiate upon the subject just after avoiding a handshake with some one to whom I introduced him. I almost guess I don't like him."—Detroit News.

Ye Puritan Pessimist

Ye worlde is fulle of woe. Ye pathway of manne from ye cradle to ye grave is lined with brambles. Laughter is ever wette with tears. An unscrupulous viper lurketh in ye glasses of sparkling wine, or, anyhow, it used to did so e'er prohibition came uponne us. You fancy you cannot live without a certain female, and a little later, behold, you cannot live with her. You sniffe ye fragrance of ye dewy rose and a gadsnapper stingeth you on ye nose. And thus it goeth, and thus, I wot, it will continue to go until ye end of time. Such being the case, there is nothing for us to do but hump our backs like an olde sheep in a hailstorm, pull down our hattes and thank providence for what it hasn't done to us.—Kansas City Star.

Sand Clock Was Wrong

Probably there is only one place in the United Kingdom where the sand glass is still used for timing purposes, says London Tit-Bits.

In the house of lords a sand glass—a squat, podgy-looking affair—reposes on the clerk's table, and is used to indicate the three minutes allotted to a member during which, after the declaration of division, he is entitled to record his vote.

A few years ago a member challenged the correctness of the glass, and upon a test being made he was found to be right, the sand being actually all down in two and three quarters minutes. His vote was allowed and more sand was put in the glass.

Penurious Philanthropist

A widely known banker in an Eastern city is looked upon as a great philanthropist and his name is a symbol of all that is noble. Strong men stop on street corners to extol his virtues. Yet I had some correspondence with him several years ago about buying a house he was handling for an estate and when the deal was closed he charged me for every stamp he had used on letters he wrote me. I insist that a man who watches pennies that closely can't be such a lovely character as his neighbors suppose.—Kansas City Star.

Oldest British Custom Revived During the War

When the war flung the world into confusion it laid its hand on the oldest custom in the British Isles, a most curious practice that had come from the far-off time of the Druids and had flourished from then without a break until the year 1915. In Burghead, a little fishing place on the Moray firth, this custom had been practiced from the very dawn of human society. It is the strange ritual of the burning of the clavie.

The clavie is made of a half barrel roughly put together and attached to a long pole by which it is carried. A stone is used to hammer in the wooden pegs that serve for nails, for it is considered as unlawful to allow iron to touch the wood. Old tales tell how a wicker basket with a fish inside used to be burned. Perhaps when the first Druid lighted the first clavie the sacrifice was something greater than a fish. Within more recent times neither basket nor fish appears, but the clavie is filled with chips of wood and shavings plentifully sprinkled with tar. The whole mass is set on fire by means of burning peat.

With an oilskin over his shoulder, the clavie bearer lifts his burning burden on his back and sets off to the site of a Roman camp, rocky promontory that thrusts itself out into the sea. Here a stone pedestal has been erected to hold the fire.

In this strange ritual Druidical and Christian customs are strangely interwoven. The lighting with peat was pagan and harks back to the sacrificial fires of Baal. The circling of the village sunward is from the same source. To the Druids the sun was an immediate object of worship. The use of wooden pegs rather than of iron nails and the use of a stone instead of a hammer are Christian, for the early Christian would not use the iron with which our Lord was nailed to the cross.

Why the custom lingered in quaint little Burghead we cannot tell. In 1915 the admiralty forbade the showing of all lights seaward and the calvie was left unkindled. In 1919, however, this sole British survival of the worship of fire, the first of all religions and rituals, was rekindled.

Don't Cultivate Harsh Voice

The nearest human object is the most interesting fact of a child's existence, and naturally is the first model, every detail of which is eagerly watched and copied.

It often requires the expenditure of much effort in after life to correct the unpleasant habits of voices and the facial contortions, careless diction and impediments of speech such as lisping and stammering, which are acquired from mothers or nurses during the time when every small muscle of a child's face, vocal apparatus and body were forming their very first habits.

Nothing that a mother can provide for her child's future is more important than the practice of controlling her own voice in the presence of the child, when necessary, and of distinct articulation, and of a reasonable amount of control of her facial expression. When she controls these, control of her moods will take care of itself.

From Pumice Island

Pumice island, near Salton sea, five miles northwest of Calipatria, in southern California, contributes thirty carloads of pumice to the commerce of the world each year. Pumice island was once an island in Salton sea, but now, three miles inland, it is entirely surrounded by dry land. However, it retains its old name on local maps. Only a few years ago it was nothing more than a volcanic peak, rising above the waters of the inland sea, but the waters have been receding so rapidly that it now stands three miles back from the shore.

Reason for Nicknames

During the contest between Charles I and his parliament it was fashionable among the church people to give Scripture names to their children, and sometimes the name would consist of a phrase, or even an entire verse. One child was actually named "Who Comforteth Us in All Our Tribulation, That We May Be Able to Comfort Them Which Are in Any Trouble With the Comfort Wherewith We Ourselves Are Comforted," Tichbourne. And what do you suppose the kids dubbed him when he started to school? "Trib."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Frog That Liked Eggs

A little girl who studies birds made the discovery that a frog will eat a blackbird's eggs, the London Morning Post reports. She found a low-built nest with two eggs, one having a small hole at the big end. Next day she found a frog on the nest, its tongue flicking in and out of the hole. "Either the noise of the grass under my feet, or the gasp I let out," she relates in a kind of affidavit, "frightened the frog away." On the third day she found both the eggs with holes and empty. Unlike toads, frogs boast teeth, but are not usually reckoned among egg thieves.

No Smocks Worn in England

It is only in American films, which are not distinguished by fidelity to fact, that English agricultural laborers still wear smocks. Once only in my life have I seen a man in a smock, an old shepherd in Gloucestershire, who was so aged that he probably imagined that William the Fourth was still on the throne.

When a workman wears "jeans" or an overall, he does so, not as a trademark, but as a protection from the defilement of his trade. He will not let himself be catalogued. The class war will not break out in England, because no one here, least of all a workman, will admit that he is in a class.—St. John Ervine in the Observer (London).

Mocking Bird

A doctor and his Irish coachman were driving past a duck pond when the coachman said: "Oi hate thim birds, sorr."

"Why should you hate the poor creatures, Pat?" asked the doctor. "I'm sure they never do you any harm."

"Sure, sorr, don't you hear thim mocking you? You niver pass thim but they call 'quack, quack, quack'!"

One on the Boss

"What does this mean, sir?" said the boss to the man coming in a half-hour late.

"It was on account of the awful fog this morning, sir," the fellow explained.

"Fog, fog!" expostulated the boss. "Why, what has the fog to do with it? You do not live across the bay."

"No, sir. I know I don't; but you do, and I thought you would be late."

Just What He Wanted

The lady shopper had ordered about everything hauled down from the shelves.

"I don't see just the right thing," she decided at last. "I want to surprise my husband on his birthday."

"Well," suggested the exhausted clerk, "why don't you hide behind a chair and yell 'Boo!' at him?"

And He Said ??-!*-!!!

Lady (calling the electric light plant)—The lights in my house have all gone out.

Superintendent — Yes, madam. A parrot got caught in the dynamo.

Lady—Oh, how shocking!

Superintendent—You'd have thought so if you'd heard what he said.

Cedars of Lebanon of Wonderful Beauty

The famous cedars of Lebanon, which are so frequently mentioned in the Bible as symbols of power, longevity and prosperity, and continuously sung by poets and extolled by artists because of their stately beauty and strength, grow to a height of from 60 to 80 feet, their branches and foliage covering a compass of ground the diameter of which equals the height of the trees.

Although the number of the famous trees has decreased considerably, of late years they have been carefully tended and preserved and a goodly number still exist. The best-known group in the Lebanon range consists of a group of 12 ancient giants—how ancient no man can tell—in a grove near the village of Eden, surrounded by about 400 younger trees, none of which probably are under a hundred years of age. Two of the "patriarchs" of the celebrated group measure, respectively, from 60 to 80 feet in girth of trunk. One of these is marked with the name of Lamartine, the French poet, historian and statesman. The younger trees in the grove are stately, compact and gracefully reposeful, but the "patriarchs" are wild of aspect and frantic in attitude, flinging their muscular arms about as though struggling with some unseen enemy. In Ezekiel the Assyrian is likened to the cedar of Lebanon, "with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of a high stature, and his top was in among the thick boughs."

Unfair to Blame Sun for Showing Up Dust

Here is a reader who actually grumbles at the sun!

"I've noticed," she says, "that whenever the sun shines in a room it seems to raise the dust. Now, why is this? Look into any shaft of sunlight and you will see what I mean."

The sun does not raise dust, though my correspondent is not the first person who has thought so. It merely illuminates dust particles which, in lesser light, are not so observable, says London Answers. The dust is always there, floating about; the sun must not be blamed for it.

Why, to blame the sun for the dust is as unreasonable as it would be to blame a pair of opera glasses for the bad actor one looked at through them. Would the bad actor have been raised by the opera glasses?

The sun, of course, is a sort of bête noir to some people, but, all the same, a room flooded with sunlight is much more pleasant than one from which it is rigorously excluded.

Put Her Foot in It

I went to a small town to teach school, and found that every one seemed to be related to every one else. That cut me off from all chance of friendly gossip, for one could never tell when she would be gossiping in front of some adoring aunt or cousin.

I was explaining this, laughingly, to a girl in the town who had been nice to me.

She remarked, "Yes, that is so, but I am one exception—we have no relatives here outside our immediate family—you may gossip to me about anyone."

"Well, the people I want most to gossip about are some newlyweds—I don't know their name,—but she calls him 'darling Donnie dear,' and they are too silly to be around sane people."

"Oh," replied my friend, "I had forgotten about my brother Don and his wife—they've been married about a month, but we don't think they are sillier than anybody else."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

WE MADE A MISTAKE

The other day we were reminded by a friend that we made a mistake in a news item in last week's issue of the Times. That's nothing, look at the lists of mistakes we observe every day.

When a plumber makes a mistake he charges time for it. When a lawyer makes a mistake, it means more business all around. When an electrician makes a mistake, he blames it on induction, because nobody knows what that is. Whne a doctor makes a mistake he buries it. When a judge makes a mistake it becomes the law of the land. When a preacher makes a mistake, nobody knows the difference.

But the printer—he is different. He has to be careful, he cannot turn his mistakes into profit or blame them on a profession. When a printer makes a mistake, it costs either friends or real money.

REVAMPING AN OLD ONE

An Oklahoma editor, just about to send his forms to press, "pied" a couple of articles, one concerning a public sale and the other a write-up of a wedding. He asked the office devil to get the two togetther and he did.

Here is how he put the two together and the mixture was not known to the editor until an anrgy preacher and the mother of the bride appeared on the scene.

"William Smith and Miss Lucy Anderson were disposed of at a public aution at my barn one mile East of a beautiful cluster of roses on her breast and two white calves before a back ground of farm implements too numerous to mention in the presence of seventy guests including two milch cows, six mules and a bob-sled. Rev. Jackson tied the municipal knot with two hundred feet of hay rope. The bridal couple left on one John Deere gang plow for an entensive trip with terms to suit the purchaser. They will be at home to their friends with one good wheelbarrow and a few kitchen utensils, after ten months from date of sale to responsible parties and some fifty chickens."—Exchagne.

Origin of Expression "Skeleton in Closet"

"There is a skeleton in every house" is said to be an old saying taken from an Italian humorous story. But the expression "skeleton in the closet" has been popularized by an English story. A woman had an only son who obtained an appointment in India. One day the mother received a letter from her son with this strange request: "Pray, mother, get someone who has no cares and troubles to make me six shirts." The mother searched in vain for such a person. Finally she called upon a woman who invited her to go with her to a bedroom. The strange woman then opened a closet which contained a human skeleton. "Madam," she said, "I try to keep my trouble to myself, but every night my husband compels me to kiss that skeleton, who was once my husband's rival and whom he killed in a duel. Think you that I am happy?" The mother immediately wrote to her son and told him her experiences and the son replied: "I knew when I gave the commission that everyone had his cares, and you, mother, must have yours. Know then that I am condemned to be executed and can never return to England. Mother, mother! there is a skeleton in every house."—Pathfinder Magazine.

British Capital Once Site of Vast Forests

Large areas of the land on which the British metropolis stands once formed a great charcoal district from which practically the whole of the city's fuel came. Vast forests of oak, beech and ash trees covered these areas, which included Norwood—the Great North Wood—Croydon, Sydenham and Forest Hill. In those far-off days of the Fourteenth century coal was not allowed to be burned, as it was considered that the smoke was dangerous to health. It is not exactly easy to see how this could be so, for the smoke from charcoal burning is, to say the least of it, most unpleasant. One bishop, who had his palace at Croydon, was greatly annoyed by a charcoal burner, who lit his fire right under his lordship's windows, filling the palace with the fumes of the smoldering wood. The charcoal burner was regarded in those times as a sinister figure, and was often credited with being in league with witches and devils.

The BULL'S EYE

Another 'Bull' Durham advertisement by Will Rogers, Ziegfeld Follies and screen star, and leading American humorist. More coming. Watch for them.

LOOKING at this Bull's picture here just reminds me of the Cattle Business, of which I am still in, in a small way.

Stock on the Exchange in Wall Street was never higher, Stock on a Ranch was never lower.

If a cattleman sold a Steer and they would let him weigh all the mortgages that was on the Steer with him, he would weigh 50 pounds heavier.

One Tenderloin Steak at a Hotel brings more than a Steer.

A quart of milk brings more than the Cow.

A Texas Long Horn brings $20 and one pair of Horn-rimmed glasses $25.

A Calf sells for $10 and its brains sell for $20.

The hide of a Cow brings $1 and one pair of shoes $18.

Two sacks of 'Bull' Durham is worth more than the Bull.

The only way to be in the Cattle business is with a picture of one.

Will Rogers

P. S. I'm going to write some more pieces that will appear in this paper. Keep looking for them.

SICK WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Can Be Carried Comfortably Over The Critical Period by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound —Note Mrs. Headden's Case

Macon, Georgia.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with my whole right side and could not lie on my left side. I was in bed about two months and could not get up only as my son would lift me. After doctoring without relief a man who was rooming with us told my son that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured his mother at the Change of Life, so I began taking your medicine. After taking it for two weeks I could get out of my bed by myself. I am now 53 years old and in better health and stronger than ever in my life. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to many suffering women, young and old, and you may use my name anywhere as long as you please. I will be glad to answer any letters sent to me."—Mrs. F. B. HEADDEN, 5 Holt Avenue, Macon Georgia.

In a recent country-wide canvass of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 200,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported they had been benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Musicians in Hard Luck

The Berlin Philharmonic orchestra is having a hard winter. The public is not patronizing it. If a singer desires the support of the orchestra in a concert he has to pay the organization $1,000 and, in addition, meet the expenses of hall rent and advertising. The box office receipts, even with soloists of standing, have not infrequently been less than $100.

Community Building

Follow Nature's Idea When Planting Trees

Take the roadside in a low and wet landscape, where you want to emphasize and still not hide the beauty of such a landscape. Nothing is more fitting than the red osier dogwood. You need not be afraid of overdoing the amount of planting in such a situation; it will always be in scale with the great open country surrounding it and will never dominate the landscape. There may be other places where an overdose of red osier dogwood would become grotesque and irritating, but not so in the open country.

Imagine a sloping hill, covered with roses, or if in a pine country, with junipers or harebells, or in the South with yuccas. Such a sight might be worth going many miles to see. The top of a bluff may be crowned with oak or maple, and in the pine country with white pine. If there be a rock cliff at a turn, such plants as native grape, bittersweet, red elderberry, yellow honeysuckle, junipers, harebells, blueberries, goat-beard spirea, etc., all in accordance with what will grow in that section of the country and make the most beautiful picture, should be planted. There are a great many other plants that will grow in such a situation, and enhance the barren cliff, as there are many other plants that will grow on the clay or gravelly bank, than those I have mentioned. The native vegetation is always the correct and sure guide to follow. Avoid stiff formality of planting.—Indianapolis Star.

Home Ownership One of Life's Big Steps

To own your own home seems a normal way of starting family life. The first question that presents itself in solving this problem is that of expense. The man or woman who has ready, idle cash need not worry, but the wage-earner, who can pay only a certain amount down and the rest on the installment basis, should do some careful planning.

Building and loan offerings solve the problem for many very satisfactorily. Learning to save consistently is another way of reaching the goal. It is generally considered good business to wait until we are able to pay one-fifth in cash for house and lot, then go ahead and borrow for the building.

Location is an important point to consider for those in moderate circumstances. Property in a central and improved section may cost a trifle more at the outset, but it also is likely to improve in value and be more salable should occasion arise to dispose of it. In growing cities, it is safe to risk a little in this way on the investment.

Value of Faith in Self

If cities of Alabama with all their resources and opportunities for development, were completely "sold" to their own people, they would soon feel much greater effects upon their progress and expansion. There is nothing like faith in oneself as an argument to others. Alabama cities have not been fully "sold" to their people as have Miami and some of the California cities. Many of the long residents of Birmingham, for example, do not even know what the community has in industrial achievements or opportunities. Half the people do not know what is manufactured here and what can be made, as is often demonstrated by new industries established by outsiders. And so with other Alabama cities.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Faith in the Home Town

In an editorial on "Believing" the Albany (Ala.) Herald says:

"It is believing that what people do counts for more than the natural advantages of a region or a community. It is believing that the contribution of every man is important as all face a common task, and that every one who 'lays down on the job' neutralizes in some material measure the results of what others do.

"Find a town whose people believe in it—believe that it is destined to grow and prosper—and you can no more keep it down than you can keep the sunshine from warming the earth."

Health in Cleanliness

Buildings with smoke-covered walls are taboo in Berlin. Regular scrubbing of building at monthly intervals is required by a new city ordinance. The measure primarily was passed to beautify the city, but advocates of the law say clean buildings also will be conducive to improved health conditions.

Ownership vs Rent

Only about 38 per cent of the American people own their homes. The remaining 62 per cent pay money to landlords. Rent money will, in a comparatively few years, pay for the house rented, but the landlord will still own the house.

Move in Right Direction

Nearly 700 American communities now maintain public play centers, and more than 12,000 men and women are employed as recreation directors.

ENSEMBLE SUITS FOR SPRING; TWO-PIECE DRESSES POPULAR

THE ensemble suit made its entry last fall. It came, it saw, it conquered, it remained—and now it is triumphing in spring fashions from one ocean to another and developed in no end of ways. The displays include ensembles in plain, tailored types, in sports models, and formal types, and all of these are varied to suit the years of their wearers.

For younger women printed silks in figured and striped patterns, made up with plain woolen materials, are used for suits in which the coat is of the wool fabric and the dress of silk. The lining of the coat matches the dress and very often the coat material is used in bandings on the dress. But sometimes a one-piece dress is made by combining the coat material with figured or striped silk. The one-piece dress has no monopoly of ensemble suits, for two-piece frocks, with skirt and overblouse like that shown in the picture, do their bit toward lending the mode diversity. In this frock the three-quarter length coat is lined with a printed silk and this same silk makes the smart overblouse, seen at the right of the picture, over a plain skirt. In ensemble suits of printed silks for younger women the new high shades in figured silks make wonderful combinations with plain wool materials, and the model pictured shows the coat faced back as well as lined with silk like that in the blouse.

Another variation of the blouse and skirt idea for an ensemble shows a very long blouse of silk crepe worn over a straight skirt of charmeen which it nearly covers. The coat is of charmeen with silk crepe collar.

Kasha cloth, especially in the natural shades, appears in more dignified versions of the ensemble suit, sometimes making a long coat to be worn over a bengaline or crepe frock. This is a favorite combination for older women and furnishes a practical coat for wear with other frocks. In the dressier types of the ensemble the frocks may be made of two colors in crepe de chine or two shades of one color. They are usually decorated with embroidery of silk and fine metallic threads that joins the contrasting colors or shades.

"Sing a song of sixpence," while a pocketful of gold is what we would all like to have, now that new spring finery is on display from one ocean to the other. But a review of this new apparel makes one thing apparent—never would the sixpence pay for so much, so far as good style is concerned, as it will right now. It is amazing how good-looking the new inexpensive frocks and coats contrive to be, and it is good business to take care of one's needs as early as possible, for it nearly always happens that the designers turn out their best work first.

It is important to begin with street clothes when an outfit is to be acquired, and to buy as good quality as can be afforded. Street clothes must stand wear and in them we make a first impression on the people we meet in the everyday affairs of life. The coat and the tailored hat and dress, the walking shoes and street gloves deserve all the consideration that can be given them.

Starting out with the coat, the new season has brought in a variety of handsome models for general wear. Straight lines and rather light shades and neutral colors are emphasized in them, but there is a good representation of the darker browns along with many light brown, beige, tan, dark blue, medium green and wood colors. The double-breast front is graceful and a great favorite. Both the set-in and modified raglan sleeves are used and an absence of trimming is a mark of distinction; for it is to be kept in mind that fashion sponsors simplicity in utility coats. Some fur appears, but there is a fad for placing it at the bottom of the coat, while collars and cuffs are without it. The coat pictured here, almost without adornment, may be accepted as a measure of good style.

Two Striking Examples.

In cloths there is considerable variety, including home spuns, twills, suede finish and kasha-like materials. Special weaves are introduced and for dressy coats there are silks and satins—in black with colored lining often in a wool material.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

The High Cost of Postponing Permanent Highway Building

Poor motor roads stifle industry and agriculture; waste huge sums annually in high maintenance costs, and greatly increase gasoline, tire and repair bills.

There is not a state, not a county, not a community, that isn't paying a heavy price for having too few permanent roads.

There are still many sections of the country—even whole states—that are trying to operate twentieth century traffic over nineteenth century roads.

This is costing millions of dollars every year, and will keep on costing millions until we have well developed permanent highway systems everywhere.

Even what we often call the more progressive communities are far behind the demands of modern highway traffic with its 16,000,000 motor vehicles.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, we need more Concrete roads —the roads for twentieth century traffic.

Your highway officials want to be of the greatest possible service to you. Get behind them with ways and means that will provide more Concrete roads and streets. Such an investment will pay you big dividends year after year.

THE BLUE CIRCLE

THE THING

SYNOPSIS.—Incapacitated mentally by shock, as a result of experiences during the World war, Renshaw makes a proposition to David Campbell, wealthy, elderly man of leisure, that for a year he assume responsibility for him (Renshaw)—practically "buy" him. Doctor Stanley, life-long friend of Campbell's, indorses the proposition, which Campbell, with some natural misgivings, accepts. The arrangement is that the young man become an inmate of the Campbell household, with the nominal duty of secretary. Renshaw meets Verity, Campbell's granddaughter, and gets the impression that she does not like him. Jenks, the butler, Renshaw also feels, is distinctly hostile. Renshaw has a feeling that the servants are spying on him. Jenks warns him that there are "queer things" going on in the house. That night he is disturbed by the appearance on the wall of his room of a small blue circle of light. Mysterious noises in the corridor outside his door cause him to investigate, but he discovers nothing unusual. His employer asks him to ignore anything he does not understand. Campbell tells Renshaw that the household is in some respects "unusual," but makes light of his story of the mysterious sounds. Renshaw meets Madame Hvoeslef, a foreigner, with an air of mystery.

Madame Hvoeslef was walking slowly toward the staircase. He accompanied her in silence. On the lowest step she stopped and looked at him. The look was a peculiar one, intense, doubtful, almost suspicious. Under it he straightened, and his own eyes hardened as they squarely met hers. He objected to being so obviously weighed by this foreigner, and he saw no reason why he should not show it. Her glance changed suddenly. She became again the fascinating woman of the dinner hour.

"Mr. Campbell has told me," she began graciously, in her rather throaty, velvet-soft voice and excellent English, "that you will perhaps be so kind as to do me a service."

Renshaw inclined his head.

"I am here to be of use," he said formally.

"You are so good." Madame Hvoeslef's manner warmed still more. She sent a swift glance up and down the deserted hall. "It is a little journey to the city that I ask," she went on hurriedly and in a very low tone. "You will not mind that, tomorrow morning—to take the train at ten o'clock and to return at five? You can be back, you see, in time for dinner."

"I am entirely at your service. I will get the rest of my instructions after breakfast, I suppose," he observed in a matter-of-fact tone and without lowering his voice. Its clear pitch seemed to alarm her. She looked about apprehensively.

"Yes," she murmured; "after breakfast—in the study. Thank you, then—and good night."

She threw in her most charming smile with that, but Renshaw's unaccustomed lips could not return the smile.

"Good night, Madame," he said with grave courtesy, and returned to the living room.

He was conscious that she did not at once continue her little journey up the stairs. Instead, she remained motionless, looking after him. He opened the door into the long room with an actual sense of escape, and immediately regretted that he had returned. Verity, still at the piano, glanced up at the sound of his entrance, and he met her eyes. They darkened as if with annoyance, and her smooth brow puckered under the same emotion. The expression passed as quickly as it came, but he interpreted it aright. She disliked him as much as he disliked her. She disliked him so much, indeed, that his casual return to a room she was in almost angered her. Well, he would not annoy her long. Without a second glance at her, he crossed the room to Campbell's side.

On the Lowest Step She Stopped and Looked at Him.

"Any instructions, sir?"

Campbell revealed the fact that he had not been as drowsy as he had seemed.

"Madame Hvoeslef told you just now that she wanted you to go into town tomorrow, didn't she?"

"Yes, sir."

"You won't mind?"

"No, sir; of course not. Why should I?"

"I'd hate it like the devil," Campbell cheerfully admitted. "A visit to town knocks me out for a month. The infernal noise alone is a nightmare. But of course that's nothing to a young chap like you."

He had forgotten or was deliberately ignoring the young chap's admitted lack of nerve fitness, and in either case Renshaw was grateful.

He included Miss Campbell in his farewell as he was leaving the room, but she seemed to have forgotten his presence. She was trying a new song in an undertone and did not raise her eyes from the notes. But the music of her wonderful voice followed him into the hall, and he still seemed to hear it as he went upstairs.

He entered his room with a warning sense of comfort. The lights were lit, a fire blazed in the big fireplace, the sheets of his bed had been folded back. It was not yet eleven o'clock. He would read for half an hour, and then, he hoped, have a good night's sleep.

Soon he began to feel drowsy and he turned off the reading lamp, but he could still see distinctly in the fire-lit room.

The house was very quiet. His subconscious mind dallied with memories of the day—bits of Campbell's confidences, We-wee's baby hands, the watchfulness of James the footman, the hushed, throaty voice of Madame Hvoeslef—

It was at this instant that he again observed the blue circle. It had appeared as suddenly as on the night before, but in a different spot on the same wall. For a few moments he watched it, his eyes narrowing with an interest he had not felt the night before. Tomorrow he must look around and find the source of that reflection. In the meantime, he would once more compose himself for slumber.

He may have slept half an hour before he heard the first sound in the outer hall. It was an unmistakable sound—the sound of a very heavy body falling. He sat up with a jerk and a muttered oath that held more impatience than alarm. It perfectly expressed his feelings. He had, indeed, been so reassured by Campbell's words that morning that it was difficult to feel any emotion but annoyance at this untimely interruption to sleep.

But the noise in the hall would not be ignored. The thing that was making it had begun to move, to crawl along, to pant heavily. Renshaw pursed his lips and raised his eyebrows. In the gloom of his room he could plainly see the transom above his door, but no reflected gleam came through it. The lights in the hall had been turned out. Even if he rose and opened the door, he could not clearly see what was in the hall. And it was none of his business, anyway. His mind clung to that fact. It was none of his business! Anything that happened in the hall— He didn't need to get up. He didn't want to get up. In fact, the notion of getting up was rather horrible. Therefore, of course, he must get up. Convalescence, he was beginning to discover, meant doing immediately anything and all things one particularly did not desire to do.

He rose quietly, and without switching on a light went noiselessly to the door opening into the hall and grasped the knob. His intention was to open that door with a quick jerk and thus surprise the thing that was moving outside. But, though he unconsciously braced himself as he seized the knob, the door did not yield. He exerted all his strength. The door held fast. He drew back and stared at it. It had not yielded, for the best and simplest of reasons. It was locked—and locked from the outside!

He had opened his windows before he went to bed. The cold night air blowing in upon his pajama-clad figure reminded him that the reflections which seemed his sole recourse could be indulged in more comfortably in bed than out of it. He went back to bed. There seemed nothing else to do. His room, he had already observed, did not include the convenience of a bell—a rather striking omission, by the way. He listened.

The thing itself was coming nearer, was very near his door, was now at the door itself. There, for a moment, it lay motionless, though he continued to hear the panting breaths. It suggested a sick animal, a very large and very sick animal. All right. If it wanted to pant at his door, let it pant.

But in his heart Renshaw objected to the thing. He objected to that locked door, and to an odd sense of helplessness that stole over him. He tried to think, and evolved only the wild idea that possibly old Campbell was testing his nerve—an idea killed as soon as it was born. Old Campbell was not that sort.

The noise outside the door began again, but now its character had changed. The knob turned, softly but persistently. Apparently the thing outside wanted to get in. Other sounds followed—scratching sounds. For a moment he listened in puzzled confusion, unable to interpret them. Then, under his breath, he swore again. The thing outside was climbing. He felt it bump against his door, and the bump was heavy and without caution. The thing seemed to have no objection whatever to being heard. In some way it was drawing itself up to the transom. There were padded sounds against the glass. There seemed to be a definite effort to open the transom.

He was sitting up again, with unswerving eyes upon that transom. And now, at last, he saw something. It was a hand and arm, very large and dark. The hand clutched avidly but futilely at the top of the transom, in an apparent effort to release the catch. But the catch was on Renshaw's side. The transom did not open. For another instant the clutching hand moved and even seemed to beckon. Then it disappeared, and simultaneously there was again the sound of a heavy fall, this time just outside the door. That was followed by the crawling sound, growing fainter by degrees, and then by silence.

Renshaw moistened his lips. The situation was simply incredible, but his mind worked on it with gratifying briskness.

It Was a Hand and Arm Very Large and Dark.

Seemingly the thing, whatever it was, fell out of some room into the hall. Yet no animal or human being heavy enough to make that noise in dropping could possibly crawl through a transom. Nevertheless, the thing had apparently made an effort to crawl through his transom. Also, it had made an effort to open his door. That seemed sufficient proof that the thing itself had not locked his door. Some one else had done so. Who? Presumably the door had been locked to guard him. Why, and from what? And if he had to be guarded from some animal or madman, why the devil hadn't Campbell told him so?

Renshaw found no answer to these questions, though they occupied his mind to a degree that forbade sleep. For a long time he brooded upon them, while renewed silence settled over the house. Then he rose and went to the door. Instantly the knob yielded to his hand. The door swung back. Beyond it was the reassuring sweep of the long, black, empty hall; and around him folded the peaceful silence of a soundly sleeping household.

Chapter V

Renshaw Asks a Question.

Renshaw dressed, the next morning, wearing a certain line of determination about his jaws and nursing a valiant resolve to keep steady. He had slept well, when he was left to sleep, but he did not enjoy his night's experience in retrospect any more than he had enjoyed it at the time. He loathed being locked in his room. And he decided that the latter experience at least should not happen to him again.

He was going to town that morning. He would equip himself while there with a little set of tools that would open any locked door with reasonable promptness. Also, he would get a flashlight, a revolver, and a few other trifles that seemed to fit neatly into his new environment.

The alertness of his mind in working out these plans vaguely gratified him, until he began to think about it. Then the old sense of lethargy crept into his consciousness, combined with the self-pity whose twin was self-contempt. He did not want to think about all these complications. He wanted peace and a clean-cut job. But, since the undesired elements were forcing themselves into the situation, he forced his will to the task of meeting them. He considered the notion of reporting the night episodes to Campbell, and promptly decided against it. He had already had his ruling on that point.

What is this thing at Renshaw's door? And what effect is all this mystery to have on Renshaw?

"How are things coming on, these days?" asked a guest who visited the hamlet sufficiently often to be mildly interested in the happenings there.

Responsible for Idea of "Unknown Soldier"

Perhaps no movement has ever appealed more strongly to the imagination of the world than the suggestion of bestowing honor on the dead who died for their country by paying homage to the "Unknown Soldier." Yet it was not till the American advertising clubs visited England this summer that the name of the man who conceived this great idea was made public. Rev. David Railton, vicar of Margate parish church, a modest parson, originated this now internationally adopted ceremony after he had officiated at the burial of so many unidentified dead on the battlefields of France. It took months of persistent hard work on his part to persuade the British government to adopt his plan, for officialdom never understands human nature or its needs. David Railton deserves a niche, too, in the temple of fame, though, his work done, he prefers to remain an unknown soldier.

Insects Called "Camels"

There is an insect in the Holy Land known as the "camel." A consignment of "camels" arrived at the London zoo a few weeks ago—males and females. All arrived alive, which in itself was regarded as remarkable since it is a habit of the females to devour the males. By some Biblical students they, and not the big quadrupeds, are believed to have been referred to in the verse "Ye blind guides which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Sikh Protects the Honor of Captain Peter

By H. M. EGBERT

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

CAPTAIN PETER was in India, and his young wife in the old manor house in the West country; and it was very lonely there.

Captain Peter was fifteen years older than Elizabeth, who seemed hardly more than a child. There had been a little girl, but she had not been able to live in the hot, deadly climate of the Punjaub; and when Captain Peter saw that the mother was likely to follow the child he sent her home to await his coming when his year of absence arrived.

Captain Peter had sent Rustum with her. Rustum was only the butler, but the captain knew that he would guard his young wife as the apple of his eye. "Take care of her, Rustum," he said.

"Till death, Sahib!" answered the old Sikh.

But it was lonely in the old house, and, after she was strong again, Elizabeth had gay house parties there. Men and women came and stayed and went again, but Philip Field came more often than any, and stayed longer.

In the hall, high up on the paneled wainscotting, hung an ancient Crusader's sword. It was so old that the rust had eaten out the shining steel like fretwork. And under it was engraved, in ancient Gothic script in the wood, a legend:

"When I hang here let peace abide
O'er manor hall and countryside,
But when my blade slips from this wall
Guard thou the honor of thy hall."

Rustum knew of the legend, for there were many such in his own country.

And he would look keenly at Philip Field, as he sat chatting with his mistress, and the memory of Captain Peter would grow very strong in him, and of his promise.

"Do you know, I don't think that black man quite likes me," he said, laughing.

Rustum had gone to his quarters, and Elizabeth sat quite alone until—

Till she heard a gentle tapping at the French windows, and started up, to see Philip Field standing upon the lawn outside.

He opened the windows and came in, and he and Elizabeth stood staring at each other. He advanced two paces and clasped Elizabeth in his arms.

Elizabeth caught her breath. She knew that she was powerless to resist Philip Field. The memory of Captain Peter had become very dim and distant.

"I love you," said Philip Field. "Tell me you love me too, Elizabeth!"

"I love you," murmured Elizabeth, and her head drooped from shame. "I love you, Philip," she said.

Crash!

Something had clattered on the wooden flooring of the hall, with a sound that seemed to shake the manor house. They started apart in terror. Then—because she was plucky—Elizabeth ran out into the hall. Upon the floor lay the rust-eaten crusading sword.

Philip Field followed her, and the two stood staring at each other in terror. Philip Field also knew the story of the sword.

Something had fallen with it. It was the section of the paneling which had been set into the wall a hundred years before. Elizabeth picked up the panel mechanically and read the inscription softly, with a dry throat.

She handed it to Philip Field, and he, too, read it. Then she went back into the reception room, and Philip Field followed her. She turned and faced him with a white face and trembling lips.

"Elizabeth! What of it?" he cried.

"You must go, Philip," said Elizabeth huskily.

"I cannot go—"

"You must go, Philip," repeated Elizabeth inexorably, and opened the French windows.

He pleaded, and he might have been pleading with a figure of stone. Presently he saw that all was over. Softly he stepped out.

Elizabeth shut the windows and went out of the room. Standing in the hall, she saw something she had not perceived before. The edge of the fallen panel was frayed, as though with a saw, and there was a tiny length of wire that had been snapped off in the fall.

That wire had been pulled from some other part of the house!

"Rustum!" she called loudly. "Rustum!"

The turban of the butler appeared through the door that led to the servants' quarters.

"Rustum! The sword has fallen!"

Rustum looked at her imperturbably. "I will replace it, memsahib," he answered.

He had a letter on a tray. "For memsahib!" he said.

Elizabeth took it. The postmark was three days old. Rustum had kept the letter back for the psychological moment.

"God bless you, Rustum," said Elizabeth.

"Good-night, memsahib," answered Rustum, retiring.

That night a letter went back to Captain Peter which proved to be the beginning of a new love and a new life.

Unhappy Moment for Wearer of Crinoline

Mrs. E. M. Ward has a host of good yarns in her remarkable "Memories of Ninety Years." There is, for instance, the terrible story of the punctured crinoline:

This unusual incident happened to a Mrs. Tooke, wife of the then vicar of Upton. After a confirmation service in the church the friends of the vicar were invited to meet the bishop of Oxford, Samuel Wilberforce—known as "Soapy Sam"—at the vicarage.

Mrs. Tooke was a woman who always dressed well. On this occasion she wore a black velvet crinoline, trimmed with old lace, which set off her remarkable complexion. After lunch, as she talked to the bishop, a curious sound like an angry serpent hissing penetrated the drawing-room.

While the guests paused in astonishment, "Soapy Sam" looked mystified. Then a grumbling noise was heard, a decided squeak, a shriek, and loud report, followed by profound silence. When a little later Mrs. Tooke rose to bid her guests farewell, her dress hung in heavy folds all round her.

Afterward she explained what had happened. Her dressmaker had persuaded her to have a special fixture to her crinoline which consisted of tubing, inflated with air, fastened tightly with a screw. This uncanny contrivance made the skirt flow out, but Mrs. Tooke struck her foot against the screw and the whole structure collapsed as the air escaped.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Historic Gray's Inn Linked With America

Gray's inn, in London, has long been the mecca of the Baconian. Those people who believe that Francis Bacon wrote Shakespeare's plays visit the inn to see the hall in which Bacon for many years presided as treasurer, and the gardens which he planned, says the Detroit News. There are links between the inn and the United States.

There was a Lawreace Washington, admitted a student in 1607, whose brother Robert was a direct ancestor of George Washington. There is an entry in the admission register of the inn recording the membership of Thomas Yale. This was an ancestor of Elihu Yale, whose piety helped to found a great American university.

Andrew Hamilton was a member of the inn. His admission is recorded in 1714; "Andrew Hamilton, of Maryland, America, gent." Hamilton designed the state house of Philadelphia, the building which was the birthplace of the American republic.

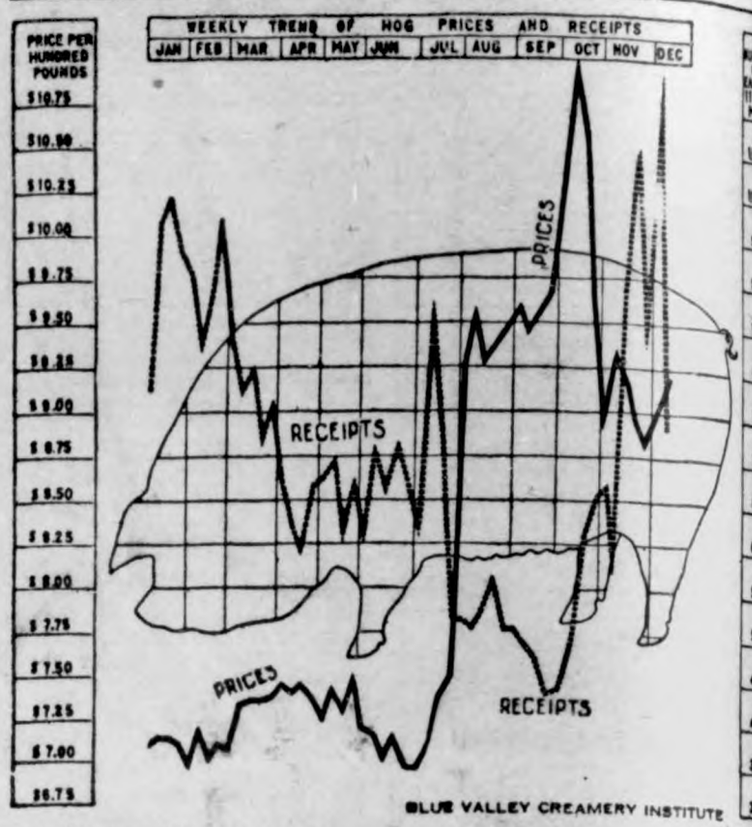
Youth and Old Age

To know what you like is the beginning of wisdom and of old age. Youth is wholly experimental. The essence and charm of that unquiet and delightful epoch is ignorance of self as well as ignorance of life. These two unknowns the young man brings together again and again, now in the airiest touch, now with a bitter hug; now with exquisite pleasure, now with cutting pain; but never with indifference, to which he is a total stranger, and never with that near kinsman of indifference, contentment. If he be a youth of dainty senses or a brain easily heated, the interest of this series of experiments grows upon him out of all proportion to the pleasure he receives. It is not beauty that he loves, nor pleasure that he seeks, though he may think so; his design and his sufficient reward is to verify his own existence and taste the variety of human fate.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Wrestling Is Old Sport

Wrestling took a most important place in the early Olympic games. It was also considered a necessary accomplishment of the athletes of the days of chivalry. The county of Cornwall, England, led the van in wrestling, so that to give a Cornish hug has passed into a proverb. The summer season is associated with wrestling matches at St. Ives, provided for by a worthy citizen who bequeathed an income for games to be held every fifth year for ever around his mausoleum which was set up on a high rock near the town in 1782. The game meant as much to St. Ives, Penzance, Helston and Truro as the Olympic games to the ancients.

Fewer Hogs—Prices Going Up



EXPERIENCED hog breeders and buyers believe the period of excessive shipments and low prices for hogs will be followed by a period of a lessened production and higher prices, according to reports received by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute.

For every ten hogs grown in 1923 only eight were grown in 1924. A careful survey over the hog belt further shows a 15 to 20 per cent reduction in the coming spring pig crop as compared with last year's short pig crop. The actual shortage on farms will naturally result in a lowering of shipments to markets and higher prices.

Exactly when this lowered pork supply will be felt is not certain, but is expected during the early part of the year. Recently prices have averaged from $2.00 to $2.50 per 100 pounds higher to the producer than last winter. When the 1923 pig crop was marketed the average price of hogs at Chicago was $7.65. The corn situation and short hog supply is expected to drive prices up to more profitable levels for the producer.

No signs are visible for a falling off in the demand for hogs during 1925. If pork consumption holds up and if there follows a normal corn crop in 1925, hog feeding this year promises to be far more profitable than it has been for some time.

KLEMME LOST OUT IN FIRST GAME IN COUNTY CONTEST

Defeated By Britt Cagers in a 32 to 14 Score—First Quarter Was Fast And Snappy

The Britt and Klemme high school basket ball teams opened the games at the County Tournament at Corwith Saturday.

The Klemme boys played a fast game from the first tip-off and made the first basket a few seconds after the whistle blew. They litterally played circles around the Britt boys and had them going the first quarter. The Klemme boys "blew-up" in the second quarter when Britt took a lead. However, the Klemme boys played real basket ball and only twice during the entire game did Britt make a successful play from the tip-off. Britt gained most of their scores on free throws as the Klemme boys could not seem to get over fouling. Britt showed real skill in shooting free throws, whereas Klemme was lame in this feature of the game.

The game wound up with Britt far in the lead—32 to 14.

The Klemme boys played a good game and if they had not lost confidence they would easily have beat Britt.

Kanawha took Garner to a real trimming and Corwith cleaned up on Hayfield in the morning session.

Goodell forgot to show up and at a re-drawing Britt drew the bye.

In the afternoon Corwith won a hard fought battle with Kanawha.

This lined up Corwith and Britt for the evening at which Britt receied a trouncing from Corwith.

Corwith again is county champion.

FIRE DESTROYS H. J. STILLE'S FARM HOME SUNDAY

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the large house on the H. J. Stille farm just north of the Liberty township Church, Sunday at about noon. When discovered the fire had already destroyed a part of the roof and the high northwest wind made it impossible to check the blaze and fire consumed the house in a short time.

Oscar Carlson and family had just moved onto the farm a few days before the fire and had gotten nicely settled. They lost most of their clothing and household goods up-stairs. Assistance arrived promptly when the alarm was given.

As the house was well to the south of the other buildings they were in no great danger.

Mr. Stille was in Chicago with a shipment of stock at the time the house burned.

MISS JENNIE MEINDERTS AND VERNER NELSON UNITED IN MARRIAGE

(By Rev. H. Pannkuk)

At the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. H. H. Meinderts, of Meservey, Iowa, on Wednesday, Feb. 25th, 1925, at 12 o'clock noon, occurred the marriage of Miss Jennie Meinderts to Mr. Verner Glen Nelson.

In the presence of the nearest relatives of both bride and groom and a few invited friends, the Rev. H. Pannkuk of the Reformed Church performed the ceremony that made this happy couple husband and wife. Hearty congratulations followed, after which all partook of a bounteous wedding dinner.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Mrs. H. H. Meinderts. She is a choice and respectable young lady. For the past five years she has been a very successful telephone operator at Meservey.

The groom is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Nelson, Jr., living on a farm in the vicinity of Klemme. He is an industrious and a successful young farmer of good character and highly respected.

We all pride in young people of their type with noble purposes and high ideals in life. They are bound to be successful in their lives. Both are active in Church circles. May Almighty God richly and abundantly bless them both physically and spiritually.

They left in the afternoon for Williams, Iowa, to visit friedns. After returning they will remain at home for a few days when they will move on a farm of the groom's father south-east of Klemme, which they will make their home.

Moving List

THIS LIST WILL HELP LOCATE YOUR OLD NEIGHBOR

This Is Moving Time In Iowa And The Past Week Has Been A Busy One

Each year The Times tries to secure a fairly accurate list of those who are movin about, both in town and on the farms.

Again this year there are quite a number of farmers moving onto another place, and there are also quite a number of changes in town.

In giving you information on this list we hardly know where to begin or where to end. The list is perhaps not accurate and it may not be complete. However, we will be glad to have you notify us of any mistake and also give us the names not mentioned here.

We will start the list with Martin Jensen, who moves from town to the Henry Beier farm west of town which he purchased last summer. Lester Stille moves into the C. W. Wiles vacated by Jensen.

Carl Suckow, who has been residing in the Mrs. Herman Ludeke residence has moved to Garner and H. J. Stille moves into that house from his farm in Liberty township, and Oscar Carlson has moved onto the H. J. Stille farm.

Wm. Bredlow has moved onto the Gladys Reuber farm, vacated by Oscar Carlson.

Harm Christians moves to the Wellemeyer farm, vacated by Bredlow.

George Johnson moves to town to the house vacated by Lester Stille, and George Buseman moves on the place vacated by Geo. Johnson.

Carl Wille moved to the farm vacated by Geo. Buseman.

Herbert Dickhues moves on the A. D. Gimer farm where Wille formerly resided.

Fred Hoffman moves onto the Fred Ax farm, vacated by Herbert Dickhues.

N. G. Moberly will move to his place in town, which he purchased of Mrs. Behringer. His daughter and her husband, who are now in Detroit, will move on the farm.

Wm. Tiggeman will move to the new farm built by Albert Haberkamp, and Dan Webner will move to the farm vacated by Tiggeman.

Cloyde Marshall moves onto the Dr. Zinn farm, vacated by Webner.

Verner Nelson moves to the Wilkins farm which his father, Tom Nelson, Jr., has purchased. Lloyd Brugman, who has been living there moves to Garner.

L. Wessel moves to the Costello place where Hoffman lived.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Post will leave the Linden Ranch and move to Nevada. Young Linden is in charge of the ranch.

We believe this completes most of the moving in this vicinity.

We will be glad to add to it further for next week. Just call us on the phone for any we have left off this moving list.

POSTAL PAY RAISE APPROVED

Measure to Increase Salaries and Mail Rates Goes to President.

Washington.—By 69 to 12, the senate adopted the conference report on the postal-pay and mail-rate increase bill. The report has already been adopted by the house and the bill now goes to the President. In the opinion of senate leaders the President will sign it, although it falls short of providing the $68,000,000 increased revecloth ded to meet the increased sal-And

The senators who voted against the adoption of the conference report were Borah, Brookhart, Howell and Norbeck, Republicans, and Bruce, Dial, George, Class, Harrison, Pittman, Swanson and Underwood, Democrats.

Senator Harrison, as soon as the conference report was taken up, raised two minor points of order against the report, but was overruled. Senator Norbeck protested against the bill because of the increase in parcel post rates and he and Senator Frazier of North Dakota, who spoke favorably of the bill, engaged in a spirited colloquy.

Senator Norbeck said the bill would cost the farmers of North Dakota $400,000 or $500,000 a year. Senator Frazier admitted this, but thought the increase would be only 15 or 20 cents per person and would hardly be noticed.

The Dickinson co-operative marketing bill, substituted for the Haugen bill, was passed by the house by a vote of 284 to 95. The measure now goes to the senate. The Haugen bill was the one reported by the agriculture committee as the measure carrying out the recommendations of the President's agricultural conference.

Indiana Rebel Senators Win Point; Return Home

Indianapolis, Ind. — The Indiana Democratic senators who fled into Ohio, tying up business in the upper branch of the state legislature in protest against attempts to pass a gerrymander bill, arrived here. They were welcomed back to the state capitol by Lieut. Gov. Harold Van Orman and other Republican leaders.

The senators were given to understand the gerrymander bill which caused them to bolt the Indiana general assembly will not pass.

Information was obtained following a conference of the men who fled from Indiana to Dayton as a protest against the bill.

Senator-Elect Deneen Given McCormick's Seat

Chicago.—Senator-elect Charles S. Deneen was appointed by Governor Small to fill out the remaining days of the term of Senator Medill McCormick of Illinois in Washington, who died on Wednesday. The appointment was announced by the governor after Senator Curtis of Kansas had requested that Mr. Deneen be appointed.

Through the governor's appointment, Mr. Deneen becomes the junior senator from Illinois only a few days earlier than he otherwise would.

Ex-Premier Branting of Sweden Is Dead

Stockholm.—Hjalmar Branting, former premier, died here.

M. Branting, thrice premier of Sweden and one of the most active of European statesmen in the affairs of the League of Nations, was taken seriously ill with inflammation of the lungs about the middle of December.

He resigned the premiership on January 24, being succeeded by M. Sandler, but was retained in the cabinet as minister without portfolio. M. Branting was sixty-four years old.

SCULPTOR DESTROYS MEMORIAL MODELS

Borglum Discharged by Stone Mountain Body.

Atlanta, Ga. — The long-standing fight for control of the Confederate memorial project on the side of Stone mountain, near Alanta, came to a head when the Stone Mountain Memorial association discharged Sculptor Gutzon Borglum and Borglum retaliated, it is claimed, by destroying the models and working plans on which the memorial had been based.

Warrants were sworn out for the arrest of Borglum on a charge of malicious mischief and the association announced that it had filed suit for $50,000 against Borglum for alleged destruction of the plans and models.

The internal feud in the Stone Mountain association is of long standing. It began a year ago in differences with Samuel Venable, who gave the scarp of the mountain on which the memorial is being carved. He charged extravagance and exorbitant salaries.

The executive committee announced that it terminated the agreement with Borglum because the work of the sculptor "was not proceeding satisfactorily." It accused him of having "delusions of grandeur." Mr. Randolph was instructed to select another sculptor to construct new plans and carry on the work.

PRESIDENT EBERT OF GERMANY DIES

First Executive Succumbs After Operation for Appendicitis.

Berlin.—Friedrich Ebert, first president of the German republic, died here on Saturday morning. President Ebert recently was operated on for appendicitis. Peritonitis developed and his physicians abandoned hope for his recovery.

Friedrich Ebert was born in Heidelberg in 1871. The son of a tailor, he turned to the trades and became a harness maker.

Later he became interested in politics and took an active part in the activities of the Socialist party. He became the editor of a Socialist paper and in 1900 was elected to the Bremen city council on the Socialist ticket.

In 1912 he was sent to the reichstag from Bremen and a year later was elected leader of the Socialist party.

When the imperial government collapsed and the kaiser and crown prince fled from the country, Prince Max of Baden, who had been appointed regent, named Deputy Ebert chancellor.

On February 11, 1919, he was elected President of the German republic.

Though he proved too conservative for many of his former Socialist supporters, during the crisis in which he crushed Bolshevism and held the warring sections of the young republic together, President Ebert was essentially a man of the people.

Stepping from the simplicity of a workingman's life to the glamour of palaces was not altogether to his liking, from a social point of view. Nor was his simple, home-loving wife, Frau Luisa Ebert, overwhelmed by the climb to fame.

Frau Ebert, the daughter of a workingman, had always done the family cooking and dressmaking, and her daughter was previously a clerk in a store.

Herr Ebert lost two sons in the war and a third son was in the army up to the time of his father's appointment as chancellor. A fourth son is a newspaper man.

At the time of his election to the Presidency Herr Ebert was known as a Pan-German, or imperialistic Socialist.

Upon being appointed chancellor and taking the reins from Prince Maximilian, Herr Ebert assumed a stern command. He set out to quell the communistic rebels and did so.

"The new government," he said, "shall be a government of the people. It must make every effort to secure as quickly as possible the peace and liberty the people have won. The new government takes charge to preserve the people from civil war and famine, and to accomplish their legitimate claims to authority."

The Independent Socialists, including a radical element favorable to Bolshevism and known as Spartacists, complicated Ebert's problem.

The Ebert government underwent many changes by reason of political, economic and popular demands. The first real crisis arose over the question of accepting the peace treaty.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

SET ASIDE FUNDS FOR LEGION WORK

Trustees of the Knights of Columbus have appropriated $75,000 to the rehabilitation work of the American Legion so that this work may be financed properly during the current year, while the Legion endowment fund is being raised to insure that the work shall be carried on as long as there is need of it, National Adjutant Russell Creviston has announced.

At the same time Mr. Creviston stated that the American Legion auxiliary and the Forty and Eight have each pledged $25,000 to finance the child welfare program during the year. The child welfare program will be financed in future with half of the amount derived from the income on the endowment fund.

Resolutions expressing the Legion's appreciation have been sent, at the direction of the national executive committee, to each of the organizations.

"It was found necessary," Mr. Creviston said in announcing the gifts, "to secure assistance from sources other than the regular income channels of the Legion to carry on its work for disabled veterans of the World war and for orphans of veterans properly during the present year. The Knights of Columbus, the American Legion auxiliary and the Forty and Eight have generously come forward to supplement Legion finances for these purposes.

"These gifts make it possible for the Legion to continue in 1925 to render these services, which are so important to the entire nation, on the same high plane as it has rendered them in the past. They will also permit us to make the necessary extensions and additions to our program.

"The immediate emergency has been met. These gifts insure these services for 1925, but no more. It remains for the Legion to make sure beyond peradventure of a doubt that this work shall be carried on effectively and on the same humane basis of personal contact so long as there shall be a disabled veteran or an orphan of a veteran who needs our help. That object will be accomplished by the American Legion endowment fund of $5,000,000, which we are now raising throughout the nation."

LOWDEN'S PROMISE

RESPONDING to the invitation of the American Legion to serve on the Legion's honorary committee to raise a $5,000,000 endowment fund for orphaned children of the World war and disabled veterans, former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois wrote James A. Drain, national commander of the Legion:

"During the war I was so grateful for the patriotism and the spontaneity with which our young men responded to their country's call to go across the sea to take part in the worst war that ever afflicted the world, that I said whenever occasion presented itself, we would show those who survived, upon their return, and the dependents of those who should fall on the other side, our deathless gratitude. In serving upon your committee, I am but redeeming in a very small way the promise I then made. . . ."

Would Consolidate in Aiding Needy Veterans

Crosscup Pishon post of the American Legion, Boston, would consolidate relief efforts of organizations rendering aid to disabled and needy veterans. The plan is to eliminate duplication of relief work and to increase its general efficiency.

Conferences with officials of the United States Veterans' bureau, officers of the state department of the American Legion, American Legion auxiliary and other military and civilian organizations have indicated a unanimous sentiment in favor of unification and standardization of relief efforts.

Ultimately the consolidated effort is expected to develop into a veteran "vigilante" with the confidence of the public. Organizations professing relief to disabled or needy veterans will have to satisfy the veteran-civilian central group that their purposes are honest and their methods are wise.

PROGRAM OF LEGISLATION MAPPED OUT

HIGHWAY COMMISSION GIVEN COMPLETE CONTROL OF CONSTRUCTION

A general program of road legislation for the year is mapped out in a bill revising the primary and secondary road laws submitted to both houses of the Iowa legislature by the joint highways subcommittee of ten.

The draft of this bill, which is a temporary one for the consideration first of the highway committees, grants the highway commission complete control of construction and maintenance work on primary roads in compliance with the requirements of the federal aid law.

It vests in the county boards of supervisors and township trustees complete jurisdiction over secondary roads except that the highway commission would still retain its present authority of approval of contracts and establishing of standards for secondary roads. Contracts of less than $5,000 need not be approved by the commission.

Eliminates All Conflicts.

The bill places responsibility for construction and maintenance of primary roads squarely upon the highway commission and for secondary roads upon the boards of supervisors and township trustees, eliminating all conflicts of authority.

It provides for the improvement of secondary roads hand in hand with the primary system and precludes improvement of the primary road system at the expense of the county and township system. All of the primary road expense is to be taken from the primary road fund, including interest on bonds. Special assessments on primary roads are abolished; and provision for refunding within the next ten years all special assessments heretofore levied is made in the bill.

This bill brings the subject of highway legislation to the point where something definite to work on is before the legislature. It represents as nearly as possible the consensus of ten legislators from different sections of the state on what should be done.

Additions are Limited.

The bill contemplates improvement of the primary system and the secondary system as rapidly as possible, providing for draining, grading and graveling of the secondary system and completion of this work with paving and graveling of the 6,600 miles of the primary system first. A provision limits extensive additions to the primary system until the present mileage is improved.

The annual estimated receipts for payment of indebtedness now outstanding and for construction work is $8,832,473.91. The average expenditure per year for payment of indebtedness and refund of special assessments is estimated at $2,627,500. This sum, together with the estimated expenditure of $370,000 per year by fifteen counties on their secondary road systems, leaves the $5,834,973.91 available for new construction.

3-CENT GAS TAX MAY WIN VOTES IN BOTH HOUSES

LEGISLATURE MAY DO AS THE GOVERNOR RECOMMENDS

The important change in the proposed gasoline tax legislation in the Iowa general assembly was the noticeable swing in favor of a 3 cent levy per gallon in place of the 2 cent tax which previously seemed agreed upon.

This shift in sentiment, undoubtedly partially due to Governor Hammill's recommendations, crystalized in the 3 cent amendment which accompanied Senator Bergman's bill when it was reported out by the ways and means committee. Representative Blake of Fayette, chairman of the house joint committee of nine which is nearing the end of its labors in preparing a gas bill for the lower house, states his committee will likewise incorporate the 3 cent levy in the measure it brings forth.

Crawford county now boasts of one of the best organized gang of wolf hunters in the state of Iowa.

If plans sponsored by the Harlan Danish Lutheran church materialize Harlan wil lhave a hospital in the near future.

A proposition to issue a 2-mill tax for a band will be submitted to the voters of Jefferson at the regular city election the last of March.

Two expert seed analysists have recently been added to the force of the Iowa department of agriculture to take care of the rush of analyzing seed samples during the next three months.

The city of Des Moines will be directed soon by the state health department to begin planning at once a sewage disposal system which it is estimated would cost more than $2,500,000 to stop pollution of the Des Moines river.

The automobile and the high heel are ruining our feet, and if all human beings followed the example of Iowans, the human race would soon be trotting around on toe-less, heel-less pegs more like a horse's hoof than than the foot of a human being, says a Des Moines doctor.

Senators from agricultural districts put through the Iowa senate the Gilchrist constitutional amendment resolution on redistricting the state senatorially which would limit any county to one senator over the objection of senators from counties containing large cities by a vote of 35 to 9.

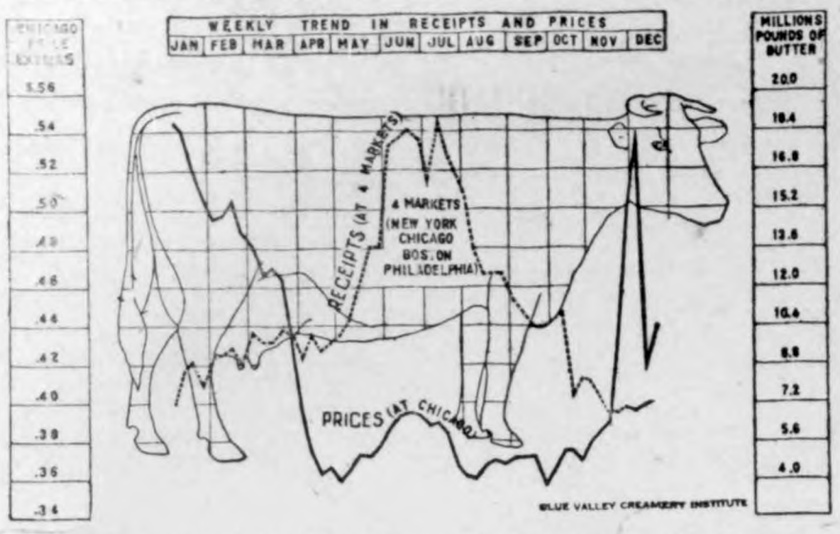
The Year in the Dairy Market



DAIRY product markets have rung a number of surprising figures on America's agricultural cash register during the year 1924. The diversification program which many farmers have adopted has led, on the whole, to better production and larger profits, says the Blue Valley Creamery institute in a review of the dairy situation.

General opinion held that during 1924 butter prices would tumble from the stable level they had kept for the past three years and reach a lower price level in harmony with the extremely heavy production anticipated. January marked a high point for 92 score butter in Chicago at 55 cents. In April the drop in price occurred and 92 score fell to 35 cents. Then suddenly the unexpected twisted into the situation. The former heavy imports dropped off when prices fell, for the importers could no longer make profits over the United States tariff wall of eight cents. Production within the country fell short of expectation during the spring and summer. Prices jumped accordingly.

The unusually favorable late summer and fall sent calculations flying again. At the time of the year when production is usually expected to slow up, 1924 turned the tables and output failed to decrease as rapidly as ordinarily during this period. Cows produced heavily. Consequently butter prices hung low over a doubtful market, running ten cents lower part of the time than during the same period in 1923.

With every man, woman and child in the country consuming an average of 50 gallons of milk in 1922 and a per capita increase of three gallons in this consumption showing for 1923, the possibilities of fluid milk markets loom up in dollars and cents. Fluid milk flooded the markets during a large part of the year, due to the favorable weather. It continued to pour into the nation's markets during the late summer and fall, but seasonal declines in November and December helped to hold the market steady at the close of the year.

Keep Your Quality High

One of the best investments in the Dairy is the High Quality of your cream.

Just that little extra care that you bestow upon the cream is a real asset. Care bestowed upon the individual cow in the dairy barn and the cream for the market are real assets. You will find that the test and the general returns will more than give you an added profit. Make a pal of your dairy cow and a friend will appear in the form of increased revenue.

It pays you to patronize this growing, home concern.

One of those high-powered su e salesman entered an office, and, seeing a freckle-face boy guarding the manager's door, attempted to strike up a friendly conservation.

"Your potted plant over there looks kinda yellow," said the salesman.

" 'At's alright," said the boy. "May be its an orange tree."

"I don't think you'll get much of a crop." said the salesman.

"Don't expect to," said the boy. "It's a century plant less than one year old."

"Boy," said the salesman. "There isn't much difference between you and a fool."

'Only this desk said the boy.

LIFE AND LOVE IN MICHIGAN

Sawyer is the name of a station on a Michigan railway. A rural couple on one of the trains attracted much attention by their open fondness for each other until the brakeman stuck his head in at the door and called out: "Sawyer! Sawyer!"

The man suddenly jumped up and indignantly exclaimer:

"Don't care a darn if you did. Hell'n Mariar we're married, gosh ding it!"

Did you read where a fellow went thirty-five days without taking a bath?"

"No. I never read dirty stories"

DAIRY FACTS

SOILING CROPS ARE REQUIRED FOR MILK

Because of a succession of dry summers in northeastern Minnesota it has become necessary to supplement permanent pastures, if dairy cows are to be properly fed and the milk flow maintained in August just as butterfat prices start on the ascending scale, says M. J. Thompson, superintendent of the Northeast Experiment station of Minnesota university.

Mr. Thompson believes this condition should be anticipated when seeds are being ordered and crops planned. Three things can be done to provide summer succulence, he says.

1. Sweet clover pasture. Not yet generally established; sow seed for 1925.

2. Summer silage. Not wholly practical since most farms with silos have winter capacity only and if there is a carry-over much of it spoils.

3. Soiling crops, that is, crops cut green, hauled in and fed.

"The last offers the cheapest and best solution of the problem," says Mr. Thompson. "Such crops require only a limited acreage. Fall sown rye is the first available in the summer. Oats, though somewhat later, offers the greatest range of seeding, late April to late June, and thus serves more need. Peas may be sown with it. Second crop sweet clover, and later sunflowers (chopped) and corn all make excellent feed. Our herd consumes over 90 per cent of these feeds, so that waste is small. In this manner the milk flow is sustained and prolonged into the winter high price period."

Right Time to Cut Rye for Feeding Dairy Cow

Rye should always be cut for hay before the awns harden, and inasmuch as the cows like the hay better when rye is cut about the blooming time, we consider that about the best time to cut rye intended for dairy cow feeding. In fact, rye hay cut from the time of heading out to bloom is reasonably good feed. With all this hay the cows will readily clean up, plus 10 pounds of good legume hay daily for the roughage, a good ration may be had with one pound of the following for each three pounds of milk produced: Ground corn or barley, four parts; ground oats, four parts; wheat bran, two parts; oilmeal one part, gluten meal one part.

"That will do," said her mistress frigidly.

"But, I'm not finished yet," retorted Mary Ann. "I can give a better kiss than you! Want to know who told me ma'am.?"

CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

This year's inaugural services were extraordinary, because for the first time in history the entire nation was able to "listen in" and thus to take part. To us as a nation it is gratifying and reassuring to know that the men who have taken the oath of office, for the most part were God fearing men. As they take the oath they place their hand upon some verse or passage of scripture. It is interesting to observe and to study the undercurrent that prompted them to make their choice of scripture. We will make these passages our study for next Sunday.

President Coolidge's Text will serve as our text Sunday morning. Plan to be in on this!

A review of the texts of the former presidents will be our theme on Sunday evening. Do you know what they are and where to be found in the Bible? Come and see!

We enjoy the inspiration of the mid-week prayer meeting and are longing to have more catch this inspiration.

The Automobile Fills a Distinct Place in Your Life

(An Editorial by Arthur Brisbane)

This is the season of great automobile exhibitions. This is the opportunity to use some money, a few hundred dollars, or, if you can afford it, several thousand dollars, and to make the bst possible investment.

Automobiles, in quality and price, never offered such values as they do this year.

Constantly the genius of American manufacturers has worked to produce in the automobile a longer life and a shorter price.

You can buy, for less than it would cost years ago to get a decent horse and buggy, an automobile that will carry you 200,000 miles. And the cost of storage, the cost of the gasoline used, and the oil, which, if properly used, keeps a good machine from wearing out, are small. Repairs on the modern car in the hands of an intelligent owner are negligible.

A horse doing ten miles a day, six days a week, would have to live about seventy years to carry you 200,000 miles. And the horse would eat all the time.

A car eats gasoline only while you are using it.

Dollars invested in an automobile of moderate cost or of high cost, represent as good an investment as the intelligent American family can make. If conditions make it important for you to consider economy, then the automobile represents the highest development in economy.

It saves time, increases efficiency, adds to the working hours by cutting out the waste of slow transportation.

Far greater than the cost of all the automobiles in the United States, millions upon millions of cars, millions of them made by one single man, is the wealth added to the nation because of time that the automobile saved.

Where the farmer lost a whole day going to the town or villiage over muddy roads, he goes now in half an hour.

The well-paid mechanic can take jobs near or far, his automobile carries him.

And, above all, the automobile is important because of its contribution to human happiness and health.

Things more important than mere economy must be credited to the automobile. The small cost of an automobile enables the entire family to have pleasure with the family united.

A man can take his wife and children, the baby and the grandparents where he will, to the seashore or the mountains, or, for that matter, all the way across the American continent.

Automobile travel, which was once the luxury of the very rich, is now the cheapest family transportation in the United States.

A father can take his family with a camping outfit, to the mountains or the shore, at a cost of one-quarter of what it would have been before the automobile came, allowing for the original cost of the automobile.

There are, unfortunately, families that cannot as yet afford an automobile. There are also tens of thousands that THINK they cannot afford an automobile, when the fact is that they really cannot afford to be WITHOUT an automobile.

And everywhere the automobile has been a blessing to this nation. The desire to possess an automobile has caused many men, young and old, to work as they have not worked before. It has inspired millions with the desire and THE ABILITY to save.

Only the foolish talk of the automobile as a "pleasure car." That which means economy greater efficiency, health, happiness and FAMILIES UNITED is a blessing and a necessity.

It DOES give pleasure, but it is primarily a USEFUL car, the MOST USEFUL invention of the human race thus far.

THE CASE

SYNOPSIS.—Incapacitated mentally by shock, as a result of experiences during the World war, Renshaw makes a proposition to David Campbell, wealthy, elderly man of leisure, that for a year he assume responsibility for him (Renshaw) — practically "buy" him. Doctor Stanley, life-long friend of Campbell's, indorses the proposition, which Campbell, with some natural misgivings, accepts. The arrangement is that the young man become an inmate of the Campbell household, with the nominal duty of secretary. Renshaw meets Verity, Campbell's granddaughter, and gets the impression that she does not like him. Jenks, the butler, Renshaw also feels, is distinctly hostile. Renshaw has a feeling that the servants are spying on him. Jenks warns him that there are "queer things" going on in the house. That night he is disturbed by the appearance on the wall of his room of a small blue circle of light. Mysterious noises in the corridor outside his door cause him to investigate, but he discovers nothing unusual. His employer asks him to ignore anything he does not understand. Campbell tells Renshaw that the household is in some respects "unusual," but makes light of his story of the mysterious sounds. Renshaw meets Madame Hvoeslef, a foreigner, with an air of mystery. She asks Renshaw to go to New York, a short journey, on a mission for her next day. During the night the blue circle again appears. He hears the sound of a heavy body on the door. Then a hand appears apparently seeking to open the transom. Unsuccessful, the hand vanishes.

Suddenly he remembered the blue circle, and began somewhat vaguely to look about his room. That circle mystery, at least, should be easy to clear up. But before he had inspected more than a few objects on his highboy, all of which seemed incapable of sinister reflection, a deferential tap on the door was followed by the entrance of Jenks, carrying an armful of linen and bath towels.

"I observed you were short of these, sir," he said as he turned toward the bathroom. "Annie is inclined to be forgetful. You will always find fresh linen in the hall closet at the left of your door as you go out."

Renshaw thanked him absently. He was standing before a mirror, and he fancied he caught in the reflected eyes of the butler a closely watchful expression. But Jenks passed into the bathroom. The secretary slipped into his coat, gave the back of his black head a final and formerly characteristic stroke with which he had not favored it for two years, and was ready for breakfast. As he turned toward the door, Jenks emerged from the bathroom.

"I hope you slept well, sir," he politely observed.

Renshaw nodded; then, on a sudden impulse, checked his stride.

"Jenks," he said slowly, "you were good enough to warn me that I might hear some unusual sounds in this house."

"Yes, sir."

Jenks, standing still, the forgotten towels still over his arm, had listened with deferential interest. Now he dropped his eyes, but not before Renshaw had seen the flash in them.

"Do you mind telling me just what you meant by that warning?—for of course you intended it as a warning."

"I took a liberty in speaking of the matter at all, sir. I hope you will forget it."

"How the dickens can I forget it?" demanded Renshaw irritably, "when I'm kept awake by the infernal noises? What's the meaning of them, anyway? That's what I want to know."

The mask of unquestioning servitude dropped from the face of Jenks. For the first time, he met the other man's eyes.

"You heard noises last night?" he asked quickly. "What were they?"

"That's what I'm asking you."

The glance of Jenks shifted again.

"I can't say, sir," he said with a swift return to his formal manner. "I ought not to have mentioned the matter at all. I did it because I thought it might all be a bit unsettling to a stranger—"

"The matter is of no importance," Renshaw said abruptly, and went down to breakfast.

The ladies, Renshaw learned, had breakfast in their respective rooms. When he had finished his meal and smoked a leisurely cigar, he went to the study. It was empty, but a fire burned on the hearth, and Renshaw sank into an easy chair before it with a renewed sense that his lines had fallen in pleasant places. The study was so comfortable and so normal! All the house seemed normal, indeed, except that north room of his and the corridor leading to it. He recalled a casual remark of Campbell: "Mr. Renshaw will use that room, unless, after he has tried it, he prefers another."

What did Campbell mean by that? Surely it meant that Campbell knew about the noises and realized that a stranger might find them disconcerting, to put the stranger's impressions mildly.

The door of the study opened and Madame Hvoeslef glanced into the room. She was a trifle breathless. He saw that she was carrying a square leather case with a handle, and he hastened to take it from her. She let him have it, but hesitatingly, and she had the air of standing over it until he had placed it on the table.

"Monsieur," she then said impressively, "I have in this case my most valuable property. It is worth fifty thousand dollars—and that," she grimly added, "is all I have left in this world."

Renshaw's unaccustomed lips twitched in their nearest approach to a smile. The jewel case, of course! The jewel case was all that was needed to make Madame Hvoeslef's role complete. Apparently she read his thoughts, for she shook her head.

"It is not jewelry," she said, with sudden dignity. "It is not money; it is not securities. What is in this case is unique in the world. If it were lost or destroyed, it could never be replaced."

Renshaw bowed and looked at the case with respect.

"It is this case," added the woman, "that I wish you to take to the city today. But first tell me, have you a handbag that will hold it?"

He told her he had.

"Will you be so very kind as to fetch it here?"

He ran up to his room and brought down the handbag. The foreigner looked at it approvingly. It was a heavy bag of foreign make, with strong clasps and double locks. She opened it and put the square case in its capacious depths, which it held comfortably.

"From the moment I put this in your charge, Monsieur, it is not to leave your hands until you give it to my representative in New York," she went on impressively. "That is understood, is it not?"

"It is, Madame."

For a moment the foreigner remained silent, looking at him, her hands resting on the handle of the closed bag. She seemed to be studying him and, even at this late hour, hesitatingly weighing him. When at last she spoke, her words were an evident combination of her mental processes.

"You will forgive me, Monsieur," she said, and her foreign accent was more marked than ever before, "if I hesitate. You are to me a stranger, and to us all; and yet, I must trust you. Doctor Stanley has told me you can do this service. What else can I do?" she added, almost to herself. "What other could undertake it?"

Renshaw made a determined effort to bring the scene back to the commonplace.

"What especial danger do you look for, Madame?" he asked lightly. "An effort to overpower me and take the case from me?"

She shook her head.

"Surely not," she said. "No one will know that you have it. No one saw me bring it here, and the servants will think it quite natural that you should go to town for Mr. Campbell. I have said in the hearing of Jenks that you are going to town for Mr. Campbell, and Jenks will tell the rest. Besides, the servants are loyal. It is not the servants we have to fear. And anyone outside who is watching will think you are one of those men who are always coming to see Mr. Campbell on business. They drift in and out like the autumn leaves," she added discontentedly.

Her hearer experienced a passing surprise. Surely some of those numerous visitors to Tawno Ker might have carried the square case back to town. She read that thought, too. Madame Hvoeslef, he was beginning to realize, was a very clever woman.

"I would not trust them," she explained in a low voice. "I dared not take it myself. I dared not trust another. My problem was serious indeed, Monsieur, until you came. Now, there must be no more delay. The case must go in. The first time I met you I said at once to myself, 'He shall do it; one can depend on him.'"

"I am honored by your confidence, Madame."

Renshaw spoke formally, but his eyes had warmed and the woman saw it. She held out her hand. He took it and instinctively played the role she had assigned to him by bending to kiss the hand. It was a beautiful hand, exquisite in form and texture. From it flowed the magnetism of the splendid creature whose dark eyes were resting on his bent head. For a moment the tableau held, and in that moment Verity Campbell casually opened the study door and glanced in. She took in the picture with uninterested eyes and addressed the secretary, who looked up without self-consciousness.

"Oh, here you are, Mr. Renshaw," she said, her gaze flitting past him, as usual. "Grandfather asked me to say that your train goes at ten-five, and that he would like to see you in the living room before you leave. Hart will take you to the station, of course. Shall we ride this morning, Leoni?" She turned to the woman as if the young man were no longer there.

Madame Hvoeslef nodded.

"By all means," she said cordially. "But, pardon me—one moment. Here is the letter that goes with the package to the gentleman whose address is on the envelope—and you will give them to no one else."

Renshaw put the letter in an inside pocket and picked up the handbag.

"Am I to bring anything back?" he asked.

"Only the sealed receipt he will give you. And thank you again, Monsieur. I cannot express my gratitude."

Renshaw bowed to both ladies and left the study, carrying the handbag. In the living room, Campbell, close to the fire, looked up at him with a grimace. One leg ending in a swollen, slippered foot was stretched out on a chair opposite him.

"One of my bad days," he explained. "A touch of gout. Too much port for dinner, I'm afraid. I'm glad you're going to have a day in town, my boy, if you like that sort of thing. It will do you good. It won't take you an hour to put through Madame Hvoeslef's little commission. After you have done that, knock about a bit. Don't bother to be back for dinner unless you choose. See a musical comedy." He winced under a twinge.

"Can I attend to anything for you, sir, before I go or in town?"

Campbell shook his head.

"No. We cleared the decks yesterday, you know. But, yes, there's one thing I must not forget. You'll need some money. That's why I sent for you."

Moving with cautious consideration for the injured foot, he took a roll of bills from a trousers pocket and handed it over.

"A month's advance," he briefly explained. "You may want to get some things in town."

"That's very good of you, Mr. Campbell." Renshaw took the money, flushing, and thrust it into his pocket. It was good of Campbell to think of that. Renshaw would have been in a rather awkward position if Campbell had not thought of it, and there were things in town that he needed.

"I'll be off, then," he added, "if you're sure there's nothing else."

Campbell's keen old eyes followed him to the door. He was beginning to like his new secretary, and the fact surprised him. He was actually rather sorry the fellow was going off for the day.

Up in his room, Renshaw tossed a few additional trifles into the black bag and carefully locked it. He must wash his hands after this fumbling with bags and locks, and then join the waiting Hart, whose patient stand at the front door was indicated by the pulsing of a motor engine. He turned on the water in the bathroom, washed his hands, and, looking helplessly around, swore softly to himself. Of all the towels the attentive Jenks had brought, not one was on the rack. A suspicion that had shot into his mind with Jenks' visit was confirmed. The towels were only Jenks' excuse to come to the room and learn whether Renshaw had heard strange sounds the night before. His curiosity satisfied, Jenks had not even troubled to leave the towels, or possibly had been too much flustered to do so.

He rescued a discarded bath towel on the floor, and wiped his hands. Then, in the outer room, he shrugged into his coat, put on his hat, picked the black bag off the bed where he had tossed it, and swung toward the door. He had almost half an hour to make his train—comfortable time. But, when he reached his door, again, as last night, the doorknob refused to yield to his touch! He pulled and tugged, with no result. The door was locked from the outside, and the shot-bolt was a strong one.

What is in the leather case that the mysterious and fascinating foreign woman considers so valuable?

Islam's Holy City

Arabian city of Mecca, situated 245 miles south of Medina, is famous for being the birthplace of Mohammed (571 A. D.), and the holy city of Islam. Mecca contains the Great Mosque, or Caaba, a magnificent temple, which is annually visited by hundreds of thousands of pilgrims. Near the city is a cave where it is said the prophet was accustomed to retire to perform his devotions, and where in 604 the Koran was revealed to him by the angel Gabriel. In 622 Mohammed, to escape from his enemies, fled from Mecca, and after a journey of 16 days entered Medina amid the acclamations of the populace. This event is called the Hegira, and marks the commencement of the Mohammedan era.—Kansas City Star.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

MISS SPRING VOGUE APPEARS; NOVEL FABRICS IN BLOUSES

SPRING has knocked—to say "Come on out, the weather's fine" and Miss Vogue has opened the door and stepped outside to join her caller. She is the observed of all observers, and we have been on the lookout to see what she will wear.

To begin with the coat, it appears to be of ottoman silk or some other fabric with a lustrous corded surface, in a light, wood brown shade. Its lines are straight, like those of its forebears of the winter, but they are easier and it is very simply designed and lined with crepe de chine, also in light brown. Spring has banished fur from the collar, sleeves and all other positions—except one. Such is the affinity between fur and coats that fur still kisses the hem of this garment where it appears in a fluffy band, shading through brown and tan to white. Miss Vogue has other coats but we may be sure this one is correct. Being simple in design and rather casual in style it will prove adaptable to almost any sort of wear.

There are many coats in the spring collections that have no trimming and there are just as many that have decorations, mostly in band effects, of embroidery, applique work, and outline needlework. A pretty whim of the season discloses scenery sketched in colored silk floss, about the bottom of light cloth coats. It began with Chinese subjects, but has wandered into other fields. Bandings of self material appear on coats of ribbed silk, made by cutting the bands so that the rib runs in a direction different from that in the coat.

If the story of overblouses and tunic blouses could be divorced from that of the fabrics used to make them it would be short and quickly told. But fabrics have changed the destiny of blouses and their story is long—literally and figuratively.

To begin with the overblouse—it has grown longer, except in tailored models finished with a hip band. The tailored blouse is developed in pongee and other wash silks, in English broadcloth and other suitable cottons, with long or half-length sleeves. Its usual adornments are lengthwise plaits and a few buttons and its collar is a high turnover or opens in a "V" at the front. Slip-over models with epaulette shoulders are popular, but some models are buttoned all the way down the front. As a finishing touch the scarf tie is favored.

Dressier types in overblouses are lengthened by means of short peplums which are single or double. Most of them have short sleeves and jabots are liked as a front adornment, but the new fabrics, striped, barred or figured, lend themselves to very plain designs in blouses, either in the overblouse or tunic blouse. One of the overblouses is shown in the picture, made of printed crepe in tan and blue. Bindings of plain silk or small buttons are about all that printed fabrics need in the way of adornment, and many of them rely upon separate collars of lace or sheer fabrics to provide the proper neck finish.

The tunic blouse is as varied as dresses are and is made of the same materials. Printed silks are at their best in these long blouses worn over plain skirts, and the plain silk appears in yokes and bindings on the tunic. Two colors, in plain crepe de chine, make very handsome tunic blouses, in which wide bandings of a darker shade are introduced in the tunic and the two colors merged by embroidery.

Eastern Beliefs Concerning Crystal

The two largest flawless crystal spheres in the world were recently exhibited in New York. One of them measures nine inches in diameter and the other just fifteen-sixteenths of an inch less. The value of the pair is placed at $50,000.

The spheres were brought to New York from China, where they were cut from a perfect Burma crystal with a small metal hatchet. The work required infinite patience.

In ancient times in the Far East and in Europe crystals were supposed to be ice in permanent form. In Japan small crystals were said to be the breath of the Great White Dragon, while the larger ones were supposed to come from the Violet Dragon.

OBITUARY

Rev. Albert Ferdinand Bock

The deseased Rev. Albert Ferdinand Bock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fredrick Bock of Klemme, Iowa. was born at Klemme, Iowa, May 30, 1883. His parents were members of the Elltown Reformed Church. It was there that Reverend Bock was baptized by Rev. Mosebach and confirmed by Rev. J Gatterman. At Klemmme he receiver his grammar school education. In the year 1904 he was moved by a sermon preached by pis pastor Rev. A. Muehlmeier on the text—"Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields or they are white already to harvest." (John4: 35)—to study for the ministry. In the fall of the same year he entered the academy of Mission House near Sheboygan, Wis. In 1920 he graduated from the Mission House College and in 1913 from the Seminary.

His first charge was at Humbold, Nebraska. This congregation he served for two years. The next few years were spent as supply pastor. His field as supply pastor was in Canada, the second at Leyeand, Col., and another at Wheatland, Iowa. In the yer 1918 he was appointed assistant to Missionry J. Stuki among the Winnebago Indians at Banck River Falls Wis. Here he labored over one year

May 28, 1919 he was married to Miss Lydia Buehrer, daughter of Mr and Mrs. John N. Buehrer of Archbod, O., who is a sister to Rev. E. Buehrer now pastor at Green Bay,, Wis. This union was blessed with two sons and one daughter. The younger son died last May, being only a few days old, and preceded his father in deaht.

About a month after the wedding Rev. and Mrs. Bock moved to Beuah, North Dakota, to take upthe work of our Beulah Mission. Here he labored faithfully until his death which took place on the 13th day of February. Rev. Bock was a faithful minister, rightly dividing the Word of truth without respect or persons, and was always conscious that he was an ambssdor of Christ, preaching the gospel of reconcilliation. He had no ambition for outward show, but to build the church according to the Word of God, and to bring sinners unto the knowledge of saving grace.

CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

A splendid congregation greeted the pastor last Sunday morning. It helped preaching a pleasure. Good hearers are an inspiriation to any speker.

Beginning next Sunday we will give the first of a series of sermons on: "What do you think of Christ.' These are Pre-Eastr meditations aimed to give us a clearer underdstanding of the Christ and to bring usc loser to Him: "Christ, the peerless leader." is our theme next Sunday.

Do not forget the young peoples' meeting at 6:45. Let us see real leadership there.

One of the great texts— that made history—will serve us Sunday evening.

The Sunday School contest is well underway. All are interested. Who wi lead. We are wondering.

The Ladies Aid meets for the reguar meeting this Thursday, in the Parish House. Their goal is: To be a "Real Aid" in building that new church that Klemme is badly in need of.

We miss all our shut-ins—both those that are kept away due to infirmities and age—as well as those who were qurantned or otherwise sick. We shall rejoice to have them all with us again

PRUNE BEFORE SAP FLOWS

Forestry Expert Tells How to Trim Ornamental Trees

ry extension specialist, Iowa State

If pruning of shade and ornamental trees is to be done this spring, it should be done before the sap flows begin, according to I. T. Bode, forest College. Pruning gives trees of this type their proper shape and removes all dead wood. Thin out bushy trees by cutting away small branches at the crown, he suggests, and at the ends of the larger boughs rather than by cutting away larger branches near the trunk. Avoid lopping off the crowns of trees too much.

The lower branches of street and parking trees should be removed to a sufficient height to clear traffic. In selecting your trees for planting, choose good speces of permanent trees avoiding such short-lived species as poplar and soft maple. Get good strong stocky trees and be sure they are alive when planted. Young trees taken from the woods are all right unless some particular form of shape of tree is desired, when better results can usualy be obtained with nursery trees.

Some good species for Iowa planting are oak, hard maple, white elm and sycamore. Of the oaks, pin oak is one of the best, being a rapid grower Planting of trees on streets should be controled by a city ordinance so that trees of the same genera wil be used on any given street.

Hubert Work, Col.

Washington—In the usual slow, careful and deliberate way that the nation has come to know Calvin Coolidge, during the last fifteen months, changes have been made until now when he takes oath of office by his own election, the President has a cabinent, one-half of which is new from that which came to him from Harding administration. Five of the ten cabinent members are new as new admnistration gets under way.

The new members of the President's official farmily are Kellogg, Warren, Wilbur, Jardine and Work. In reality, there have been six new faces, but Harlan Fiske Stone, passed on from the Attorney-Generalship to the Supreme Court bench—to be replaced by Warren of Michigan.

Changes in the cabinent have been unhurried and each new selection has been forced by circumstances. New heads for the Department of State, Navy and Interior were forced by the Teapot Dome exposures. The change in Agriculture was caused by the death of Secretary Wallace. The resignation of Charles Evans Hughes brought about the selection of Frank. B. Kellog for the post.

Even the change within the White House, the resignation of Private Secretary to the President, Bascom Slemp, was forced, and the position went to Roy Sanders of Indiana.

The arrival of Frank B. Kellogg from London last week, where he had served as American ambassador to England for one year, completed the actual presence of the Cabinent group in Washington. Each and everyone has conferred at great length with the President and all were set and ready to assume duties immediately following the inaguration this week.

The opposition to the appointment of Warren of Michigan as Attoenry-General gave way in the last hours of the closing congress when the President refused to consider another selection.

Summed up, the middle-west and west seems to lead in cabinent posts Wilbur, Navy; and Hoover, Commerce, are from California, Kellogg, State, is from Minnesota, Jardine, Agriculture, is from Kansas; Work, Interior is from Colorado, Warren, Attorney-General, is from Michigan while Indiana, iwth New, Post Office; Davis, Labor, and Sanders Secretary to the President, leds ain repentation.

Weeks, War, from Massachussets and Mellon, Treasurer, from Pennsylvania, are the only two eastern men in the cabinent.

At least, it cannot be said that President Coolidge kept his eyes to the east in the remodeling of his cabinent.

CONRAD QUANDT AND W. F. LAU WIN IN SCHOOL ELECTION

188 Ballots Were Cast at the Election Here Monday

When the smoke of battle had cleared away at Monday's annual school election the ballots totaled up 102 votes in favor of Conrad Quandt and 91 ballots were in favor of W. F. Lau, those being the two highest by a large majority and who will be the members of the Klemme School Board of Directors for the coming three years.

P. M. Griesemer, the next highest received 48 votes for the office of and Mrs. George Gruetzmacher each received 48 xotes for the office of director.

There were six or seven spoiled ballots at Monday's election. About five had voted for three directors and one ballot had four names crossed on it.

The new directors directors are both young business men of Klemme. They have never befoe asked for a public office and we believe Mr. Quandt and Mr. Lau will be good men to sit on the board. Both men have a vital interest in the school as they have children who are attending school. They will conduct their new office to the best interests of the school and communiy .

INDIVIDUAL EAR TEST NEEDED

Iowa Has Plenty of Seed Corn, but it is of Poor Quality

According to surveys conducted by farm bureaus over the state and by the farm crops extension service, Iowa State College, there is a great need, this spring, of conducting an individual ear test on all Iowa seed corn. There seems to be a greater suppy of seed corn than last year but it is of the utmost importance that every ear intended for seed should be given the individual ear test in order to weed out the week dead and diseased ears.

Monroe county reports results on testing 1175 ears from 42 farms. Of this number 127 ears were either weak or dead ond of the 1048 ears testng strong, 189 ears were infected with mold, making their use as seed unsafe.

It is hard to estimate the actual money returns that a farmer can make testing seed corn, says E. S. Dyas, farm crops specialist but there is no doubt but what he can make more money testign his seed corn during the early part fo March than he can in any other way.

Germination tests just completed by the extension service on seed corn samples received from farmers show great variation in the vitality of the early picked corn. The vitality of the samples, each representing 10 0ears varied from 100 percent strong to as ow as 61 percent strong. The average of all samples was 89 percent strong with 11 percent unfit for seed. Ten samples tested less than 85 percent strong and 19 sampes, 95 percent strong or above. These samples are probably better than the average Iowa seed corn, say exetnsion workers.

The germintion tests show, say F. G. Churchill, also of the farm crops extension service. that a portion of every ot of seed corn should be given the individual ear test before using, even if the seed was gathered early and supposedy kept in a dry, we ventilated pace. Altho there is plenty of good seed corn in Iowa it wil take work to secure the best and insure a satisfactory stand.

Twenty-five counties have definitey arranged for meeting to take up germination tests and seed corn selection. Farmers wil bring germinating corn to be read and also samples of their seed corn to have it sorted over and the best esected. Those interestd should communicate with their county agents and arrange to attend them eeting in heir ocalities.

Gives Full Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for Remarkable Recovery

Wellston, O.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make me strong. I was troubled with my back and sides hurting me till I could not do my work, and whenever I caught cold it made me irregular. Since I have taken the Vegetable Compound my side and back don't bother me and I can do my housework and care for my children now, where before I did not feel like doing anything or going around. After my first child was born about four years ago I saw an advertisement in the paper about the Vegetable Compound. I knew it would help me, but I was afraid to try it because people said it would help you to have children and I knew I was having children fast enough. But I thought if it would help me it would be better to have a whole house full of children and have good health. I became stronger from taking it and my husband says I look like a live woman instead of a dead one. When Spring comes I am going to take your Blood Medicine as I am very thin. I will answer letters from any woman who wishes to ask about your medicine."—Mrs. WILLIAM BUTTS, Wellston, Ohio.

WHITE PAPER!

SYNOPSIS.—Incapacitated mentally by shock, as a result of experiences during the World war, Renshaw makes a proposition to David Campbell, wealthy, elderly man of leisure, that for a year he assume responsibility for him (Renshaw) — practically "buy" him. Doctor Stanley, life-long friend of Campbell's, indorses the proposition, which Campbell, with some natural misgivings, accepts. The arrangement is that the young man become an inmate of the Campbell household, with the nominal duty of secretary. Renshaw meets Verity, Campbell's granddaughter, and gets the impression that she does not like him. Jenks, the butler, Renshaw also feels, is distinctly hostile. Renshaw has a feeling that the servants are spying on him. Jenks warns him that there are "queer things" going on in the house. That night he is disturbed by the appearance on the wall of his room of a small blue circle of light. Mysterious noises in the corridor outside his door cause him to investigate, but he discovers nothing unusual. His employer asks him to ignore anything he does not understand. Campbell tells Renshaw that the household is in some respects "unusual," but makes light of his story of the mysterious sounds. Renshaw meets Madame Hvoeslef, a foreigner, with an air of mystery. She asks Renshaw to go to New York, a short journey, on a mission for her next day. During the night the blue circle again appears. He hears the sound of a heavy body on the door. Then a hand appears apparently seeking to open the transom. Unsuccessful, the hand vanishes. Madame Hvoeslef gives him a leather case, declaring its contents are priceless, which he is to deliver to a Mr. Atkins in New York. Renshaw again finds his door locked. Someone wants him to miss his train.

He wasted no time on it. In two strides he was at a front window, had jerked it open, and was calling down to Hart.

"Send Jenks up here, please," he directed. "My door is caught and I can't open it. Tell him to bring an extra key."

He caught the expression of surprise on Hart's face as he jumped from his car and ran into the house. There was a several-minute interval, followed by the sound of hurrying steps, of fumbling at the lock, and the door swung open. Jenks stood outside, his round face wearing an expression of combined surprise and concern. "I'm so sorry, sir," he said hurriedly. "Most annoying for you, sir. I hope this hasn't lost you the train."

"I think not."

Renshaw had no time to discuss the incident. It had taken five or six minutes to get out of the room, just enough to make the difference between a leisurely catching of the train and a determined effort to get it. He hurried down stairs and into the waiting car with a terse order to Hart to "let her out." Ahead of him, cantering down the maple-lined avenue leading to the road, he saw Verity Campbell and Madame Hvoeslef, mounted on excellent horses.

The kind of thing that was going on at Tawno Ker wouldn't do—it simply wouldn't do at all. This being locked into one's room was both absurd and infuriating. He must do something about it. At the reflection his will experienced the usual recoil—a recoil that shook him as the discharge shakes a gun. He did not want to do anything, but he must.

He caught his train, thanks to the fine abandon of Hart's driving. In the smoking car he settled the traveling bag on his knees, and, with one hand resting protectingly upon it, whipped his mind to the point of constructive thought.

His first and strongest conclusion was that he must get rid of the case at the earliest possible moment. That square leather case, whatever its contents, increasingly represented the particular kind of responsibility he desired to escape. When his train reached the city, he hurried to a taxicab, and having given his instructions to the driver, who received them coldly, settled back on the cushions and regarded with growing disfavor the bag on his knees.

He began to feel as if that bag had always been upon his knees—as if it would always be there. His impulse to hand the case over to another grew with each moment that passed. And yet, from start to finish of the little project of bringing it to town, nothing unusual had occurred except the episode of the locked door, which possibly had nothing whatever to do with the leather case. No one had molested him; so far as he knew, no one had even observed him. His fifty-thousand-dollar charge might have been a box of collars, for all the interest it created in any mind save Madame Hvoeslef's and his own—and his interest, up till now, had not been overwhelming.

The taxicab stopped at the entrance to the Trust company's elaborate offices, and Renshaw, having largely overpaid the driver rather than wait for change, hurried inside and demanded audience with the man, Atkins, to whom his letter was addressed. His impatience appeared to annoy a many-buttoned office boy, who conducted him to a bench in a lobby and aloofly advised him to wait there. Renshaw bit his lips, but obeyed. His nerves were relaxing a trifle. He had reached his destination, had all but turned over his package, and thus far the case was safe.

Five minutes later the buttoned youth returned.

"Mr. Atkins will see you, sir," he reported, and led Renshaw to a desk behind brass railings, in a distant corner of the office. He languidly apologized for the slight delay in receiving the visitor, and accepted without special interest the letter Renshaw handed him. Breaking the seal, he glanced over the note, nodded, and extended a casual hand for the square case. Renshaw took it out of the bag and set it on the other's desk.

"I'm glad to have this thing off my hands," he confessed. "I got the impression that it was rather important."

Atkins nodded again. "We'll take care of it," he sighed. As he spoke he signed a slip of paper that had been inclosed in Madame Hvoeslef's letter, and, putting it in an envelope, sealed the latter and handed it over. Renshaw tucked it away in a pocket with a sensation of relief. As he turned to go, the other stopped him.

"I suppose I ought to open this and look at it," he murmured sadly. "But we have the only duplicate keys—and I understand that it has not been out of your hands since Madame Hvoeslef gave it to you. Is that correct?"

"Yes."

"Then we're all right. Good morning."

Renshaw picked up the handbag and turned away. He would go back to the station, he decided, and check the bag till train time. Then he would have a haircut and do a bit of shopping before lunch. Also, he must not forget the revolver and those small tools.

At first he did not recognize in the outer hall the uniformed figure, and the figure itself seemed to be struggling with an impulse to scuttle away. Then he knew his man.

"Hello, Hart!" he exclaimed in surprise. "What are you doing here?"

Hart produced his semi-military salute.

"I had to bring the ladies to town, sir."

"But—they were off on horseback when I left."

"Their plans changed, sir—very suddenly. They had a hurry call from town."

Hart's manner was entirely respectful, but there was something about it Renshaw didn't like. It was almost as if the man were amused or exultant over something. He turned away in silence. As he reached the elevator that descended to the street, he became conscious that Hart had followed him.

"I Am Glad You Called Up," He Said Rapidly. "Any Clue Yet?"

"I beg pardon, sir," he said deferentially, "but I understand we're starting back at four o'clock. I'm to call for the ladies at the Waldorf. If you're ready then I'm sure they'd be—"

"Thanks, but I'm taking the train. I may not be back till late. I'll pick up something at the station to get me home."

"Very good, sir." Hart saluted and turned away as Renshaw stepped into the waiting elevator.

Hart had taken a good deal upon himself in making that suggestion, the secretary decided. How did he know the ladies would be willing to take him back in the car? He gave a casual thought to the "hurry call from New York" which had swung them from their horses and into a motor for town, but his mind did not dwell on it. He was hurrying to the station to get rid of the bag he still carried, and his thoughts were on his next move. He left the bag with a maiden who threw in a smile with the check, and hurriedly visited several shops, stopping for a haircut on the way. Also, he made another visit with a view to settling a question that had risen in his mind. This visit took some time, and its result was disappointing. The man he especially wished to see was out of town.

The little matter of buying revolvers without a license was adjusted with an ease that almost embarrassed him but left the seller of the weapons unmoved. He bought two revolvers and purchased a few small tools at the same place—dropping the lot in his overcoat pockets with a fleeting regret for the handbag. If he had had his wits about him, he would have made his purchases before he had checked the bag, and left them safely inside it. However, he was now entitled to a late luncheon, and he consumed this with considerable relish at a restaurant he had liked in the old days. He was leaning back, smoking a cigarette, with a mind almost at peace, which for him meant a mind empty of thought, when a reflection struck him like a blow. Its force brought him upright in his chair.

Suppose that hurry call to New York had something to do with Madame Hvoeslef's leather case?

He took out his handkerchief and wiped a forehead suddenly damp. As he did so, he uttered the abrupt note that was his nearest approach to a laugh.

He had promised Madame Hvoeslef that the bag should not leave his hands for one moment. He had assured Atkins that it had not left his hands. He had believed he was telling the truth. But now he recalled something that made him set his teeth. The bag had been out of his hands. He had left it on his bed when he went into the bathroom to wash his hands—and he had spent a few minutes groping around for a towel—

Well, suppose he had? His wretched nerves would make the most of that, but his common sense need not. Nothing had happened to the case in those few minutes. No one had been inside his room, though someone had locked the door on the outside. Suppose—suppose—

He sprang to his feet, summoned his waiter, and paid his bill. He would suppose nothing. He need not continue to let his imagination run away with him. There was a very simple way to find out that the square package was all right. He need only go to the telephone and call up Atkins.

As Renshaw spoke, Atkins' voice took on a note of excitement.

"I'm glad you called up," he said rapidly. "Any clue yet?"

Renshaw moistened his lips and brought out a question. For another moment the two men talked at cross purposes. Then, very slowly, Renshaw's mind took in what the other was saying. After he, Renshaw, had left the Trust company's offices, Atkins had opened the square case, as a final precaution before committing it to the vaults. He paused at this moment in his recital to mention bitterly that he should have done this before handing over a receipt. For the case, when opened, contained only one thing—and that one thing was a large collection of nice, clean, smooth sheets of white writing paper. From the poignant note Mr. Atkins' voice took on at this point in the recital, Renshaw further grasped the fact that the paper was not at all what Mr. Atkins had expected to find in the square leather case.

"I telephoned at once to Madame," Atkins went on. Throughout, Renshaw noted, he had been careful to mention no names. "Naturally, she became very much excited—"

Renshaw hung up the receiver. Atkins had told him all he knew. From a certain nervous clicking of the instrument, he suspected that Atkins desired to continue the conversation, but he had no time for that.

He hurried out of the building, flung himself into a taxicab, and was driven to the Waldorf. There he went in turn through the restaurant and Peacock alley, without finding the two women he sought. He dared not ask for them—or dared he? Atkins had been so careful about mentioning names. He decided at last to inquire at the desk for "Miss Campbell." Almost anybody might be Miss Campbell. Miss Campbell, he learned, was not registered at the hotel.

Renshaw returned to Peacock alley with his problem. It was after three. Hart was to call for the women at four. They had not registered, of course, for luncheon. They had gone out, doubtless, after luncheon. But they would return to the Waldorf as a starting point at four.

He sat down gloomily, drew his hat over his eyes to shut out the brilliant pageant that unceasingly swept past him, and reconciled himself to the long wait.

So the valuable contents of the leather case are white paper! Did somebody change its contents?

English Cider Customs

Cider making is quite an institution in England. John Phillips, the poet, praised the sweet Hereford cider as surpassing Tokay and all other foreign vintages. A footnote to history relates that the earl of Manchester, ambassador in France, frequently palmed off this sweet cider on the French noblesse as a wine beyond price. In the West country the old ritual called "Griggling" is remembered, country boys forming bands to tour the orchards, and climb after the small worthless apples, or griggles. The ringleader would be expected to report at the farmhouse, and recite a certain moral fable, entitled "A Rude Boy Stealing Apples," and telling of such rude ones' fates. The good wife of the farm would then pour out cider for all, a libation to insure her protection, another year, against rude robbers.

Shells for Gas Masks

Coconuts to the amount of 100,000,000 are imported yearly into the United States for food and other purposes. The United States army uses tons of coconut shells to make an absorbent charcoal for gas masks.

Paper Barrels

Winding barrels from a roll of tough "chipboard" paper is accomplished on a machine consisting of a cylinder, cut in two parts, which may be drawn apart on the axle to produce different lengths. The paper, passing through tension rollers and an adhesive device, is wound for a predetermined number of layers, then a slitting wheel divides the paper, the cylinder halves are drawn apart, and an additional thickness of paper wound on in the center to provide the bilge.

Tragedy

The smaller daughter of a certain well-known actor had seen and heard her father rehearsing a new part, and after it was over she retired, greatly impressed, to the nursery. A little later her mother overheard her apparently rehearsing a play she was inventing as she went along.

"My loved one is ill. I must go to him!" There was a momentary pause. Then suddenly: "Blow it, he's dead."

Rooster Could Count

A class in experimental psychology at the University of Chicago has found that a rooster can count. Kernels of corn were arranged in rows on the floor, every third kernel being tacked down. The rooster discovered this and passed up the stationary kernels. Then the third kernels were loosened and the rooster was set at his task. He skipped them until his foot struck one, when, with a chuckle, he returned and ate all the kernels.

HEALS RUNNING SORES

"I feel it my duty to write you a letter of thanks for your wonderful Peterson's Ointment. I had a running sore on my left leg for one year. I began to use Peterson's Ointment three weeks ago and now it is healed."—A. C. Gilbrath, 703 Reed St., Erie, Pa.

For years I have been selling through druggists a large box of PETERSON'S OINTMENT for 35 cents. The healing power in this ointment is marvelous. Eczema goes in a few days. Old sores heal up like magic; piles that other remedies do not seem to even relieve are speedily conquered. Pimples and nasty blackheads disappear in a week and the distress of chafing goes in a few minutes. Mail orders filled. Peterson Ointment Co., Inc., Buffalo, N. Y.

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Spring must be here. Our printer, Clarence Elder, saw a whole flock of meadowlarks yesterday, heard a robin and saw some flies. We were rather in doubt about it until we were informed by others that they could verify the statement—and it also rained Sunday night—another sure sign of spring. And besides all that the kids are buying kites.

FORTRESS MONROE "BLOWN OFF MAP"

Army Aircraft Demonstrate Ease of Annihilating Warship and Fort.

Fortress Monroe, Va. — Fortress Monroe was "blown off the map" here in a thrilling night raid conducted by aircraft which earlier in the day had demonstrated the futility of anti-aircraft guns by destroying a battleship silhouetted on the ground and silencing the land batteries provided to defend the ship and the great fortress.

Two admirals, four generals—among them General Mitchell, deposed air chieftain—four congressmen, and a huge throng of citizens witnessed the compete substantiation of Mitchell's contentions—that airplanes can do their stuff today with scant regard for land and sea forces.

And when it was all over the officers in charge of the anti-aircraft guns frankly admitted their defensive exhibition was a total failure.

The night attack on Fortress Monroe was sensational and even awe-inspiring. The light and speedy pursuit planes which had won the morning and afternoon contests raced through the dusk and paved the way for the great Martin bombers by clearing the air of imaginary defensive planes and silencing the ground batteries of anti-aircraft guns.

Then the bombers reduced the fortification to fragments by dropping nine tons of flares.

Not a single one of the great attacking flotilla was located by a searching light until after the flaming torches had dropped through the air and struck their target.

This amazing result was achieved in spite of the fact that the defensive forces knew the time of the attack, the direction from which it was coming, the number of their foes—and had a brilliant moonlight night to help!

The demonstration was only a confirmation of what had gone on all day. At mid-morning the first inning of the games began.

Among those present were Representatives O'Sullivan and Rogers of the committee, Admirals Strauss and Moffett, and Generals Patrick, Mitchell, Drumm, Fries and Callan.

Hidden from view by a smoke screen laid by a Martin bomber, pursuit planes opened the attack on the target with light bombs and machine gun fire to discommode anti-aircraft gunners. Simultaneously, other pursuit planes cleared the air of enemy airplanes while bombers added to the marines' discomfort by gas and smoke bombs.

The targets were four feet in diameter and ten feet long. These first defensive shots were fired when they were at 6,000 feet and the last at 1,000 feet. Not a shell struck the attackers, although the official witnesses claimed a number of "estimated hits."

Wheat Prices Drop as Hogs Go Up 50 to 75 Cents

Chicago.—A drop in the price of May wheat of 11⅝ cents, a drop in July wheat of 7 cents, similar sharp breaks in out-of-town cereal markets, and a sensational rise in the price of hogs featured trading on Friday in Chicago markets.

Having closed Thursday at $1.92 6-8, May wheat on the Chicago Board of Trade, opened Friday at $1.90½, which was the high point for the day. The lowest point was reached shortly before the close, when the price touched $1.80. From there it rebounded to $1.81¼, where it closed.

A skyrocket jump of 50 to 75 cents was recorded in the hog market on Friday, making an advance of nearly $2 since a week ago and about $3 compared with two weeks ago.

O. K.'S SEARCHING AUTOS FOR LIQUOR

U. S. Supreme Court Holds No Warrant Is Needed.

Washington. — Federal prohibition agents may lawfully stop automobiles and other vehicles and search them for contraband liquor without a warrant, the Supreme court decided in a case from Michigan brought by George Carroll and John Kiro.

In another liquor case decision, brought from Georgia by Sig Samuels, the court held that states may, under the Constitution, make unlawful the possession of liquor acquired legally before enactment of the federal prohibition act.

Carroll and Kiro had been negotiating with federal enforcement agents for the sale of liquor, and the court held there was ample justification for the stopping and searching of their automobile near Grand Rapids, Mich., without a warrant.

In the Georgia case it had been shown that Samuels had placed in his cellar liquor lawfully obtained before the passage of the prohibition law, and before the state of Georgia made possession of intoxicating liquor unlawful. Chief Justice Taft asserted that states could make unlawful the possession of such liquor, even though it was permitted by the Eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act.

President Signs Bill Giving Solons Pay Raise

Washington.—The Sixty-eighth congress passed into history without having during its final days enacted any of the measures which had been the principal subjects of controversy.

Farm legislation, the Muscle Shoals bill, the McFadden banking bill, the Cramton prohibition bureau bill and various other measures all went by the board.

President Coolidge signed the legislative appropriation bill, containing the salary increases, at the capitol a few minutes before the session came to an end.

Under the bill as approved, salaries of cabinet members, the speaker of the house and the vice president are raised from $12,000 to $15,000, and those of representatives and senators from $7,500 to $10,000. The salary increases were effective with the new terms which commenced March 4.

Dawes Gives Oath to New Senators

Washington.—Eleven men who were not members of the senate in the Sixty-eighth congress were sworn in as senators. Ten took their seats in that body for the first time. T. Coleman Du Pont, new senator from Delaware, a Republican, served once before in the senate. All the re-elected senators also were sworn in for their new terms.

The oaths of office were administered by Vice President Dawes. The senators-elect appeared before the rostrum in groups.

RULES U. S. CAN SEIZE RUM SHIPS

Federal Court Decides Vessels Outside 12-Mile Limit Can Be Confiscated

New York.—The right of the United States government to seize a vessel flying the flag of another nation outside the twelve-mile limit if there is proof of her intention to land liquor on American shores was legally established for the first time by a decision handed down by Federal Judge Edwin L. Garvin in Brooklyn in ruling for the government in its action against the Dutch schooner Zeehound.

The decision, which directly insured retention by the government of the Zeehound's seized cargo of liquors and champagne, valued at about $200,000, is likely to have far-reaching effects.

It cannot be used, however, in criminal action against the captain and the crew of the schooner, which was seized off Fire Island, as they have been acquitted of charges of conspiracy to violate the Volstead act.

Seizure by Coast Guard.

The seizure was made by the coast guard cutter Seminole on December 7, 1923. The liquid cargo, 2,180 cases, was impounded in the army base warehouse at the foot of Fifth street, Brooklyn. Capt. H. J. Krans of the schooner, its supercargo and seven members of the crew later were tried and acquitted, largely because the government failed to prove that liquor had been landed from the Zeehound while it was inside the three-mile limit.

Assistant United States Attorney Howard Osterhout, who tried the forfeiture action decided, said that the outcome of the case probably would have been different had Judge Garvin's decision then been made.

Twenty-Eight States Oppose Child Labor Law

Washington.—Rejection of the proposed child labor amendment to the Federal Constitution by the Missouri house of representatives on March 3, and by the Nebraska senate on March 4, brings the total number of disapprovals, by one or both branches of state legislatures, up to twenty-eight, according to the National Committee for Rejection of the Amendment.

"The ratifications remain three, namely, Arizona, California and Wisconsin; partial ratification has been recorded in New Mexico, and a vote rescinding previous approval has been passed in Arkansas," says the committee.

"Ten legislatures now in session—Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island and West Virginia—are expected to act and indications favor rejection of the amendment in all of them.

"It is also presumable that there is little adoption sentiment in the five states—Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi, Maryland and Virginia—whose legislatures have no session this year."

Col. Fechet Named Air Chief in Place of Mitchell

Washington.—Lieut. Col. James E. Fechet, commander of the Kelly flying field at San Antonio, Texas, was picked by Secretary of War Weeks as the successor to Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, assistant chief of the army air service. The appointment, sent to the senate by President Coolidge, will take effect April 27.

On that date Colonel Fechet, if his appointment is approved by the senate, will take the rank of brigadier general, while General Mitchell will automatically drop back to the grade of colonel, which he held before his present appointment.

New York Banker Stabs Self to Death With Pick

New York.—While the bureau of missing persons conducted a quiet hunt for Morris K. Parker, vice president of the Equitable Trust company, his body, with an ice pick imbedded near the heart, was discovered in a locked room of the exclusive University club.

Officials of the trust company issued a statement that Parker's affairs as vice president at the head of the bond department were in A-1 shape.

Bandits Peril Manager of Mrs. Evans' Ranch

Mexico City.—The Mexican government is taking steps to protect the life of George Camp, an American, and the administrator of the San Pedro Cortocan hacienda, formerly owned by Mrs. Rosalie Evans. Mrs. Evans, an American woman and widow of a British subject, was killed last August in an ambush near the ranch.

23 Communists Guilty

Beuthen, Germany.—The trial of 33 Communists for conspiracy to undermine the republican state and the illegal acquisition of arms resulted in the acquittal of ten, nine months' imprisonment for three, and short jail terms or fines for the rest.

Women Re-elect Mrs. Wilson

Washington.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was re-elected honorary president of the Women's National Democratic club at the annual meeting here.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE INAUGURATED; TAFT ADMINISTERS OATH

Vice President Dawes Also Sworn Into Office—Millions Hear Executive's Address by Radio for First Time in History.

Washington. — President Coolidge was inaugurated with one of the simplest ceremonies of a hundred years. Almost at the same time Vice President Dawes also took the oath of office.

For the first time, not only the thousands who gathered in Washington heard a President deliver his inaugural address, but millions throughout the United States, and probably many elsewhere, heard the address by radio. President Coolidge spoke to probably the greatest audience, seen and unseen, that ever has been addressed by any other man in the history of the world.

With all its studied simplicity and lack of display, which was at the express direction of the President, the ceremony was in marked contrast with the event of nineteen months ago, when, roused from sleep by news of the sudden death of President Harding, Mr. Coolidge took the oath of office administered by his father in the glow of an oil lamp in a Vermont farmhouse.

President Coolidge

The only vice president since Roosevelt to succeed to the office by popular election, President Coolidge renewed his oath before Chief Justice Taft, the only President to take it before a former President.

Ceremony Follows Tradition

The ceremony was the traditional one, and was carried out on a platform built at the east front of the capitol, before the great steps leading to the entrance at the middle of the building, a spot selected in the historic compromise of generations ago when the house and senate each contended that the inauguration should take place within its own precincts.

While congress was winding up its eleventh-hour business, the official congressional committee called at the White House to escort the President to the capitol. This was soon after eleven o'clock.

Pennsylvania avenue, despite the restricted program which cut down the show, was packed as the President, escorted by a troop of cavalry and guarded by secret service men, passed along.

At the capitol he went at once to the President's room, adjoining the senate chamber, and busied himself disposing of acts of congress.

The prelude to the inaugural procession—for the President's journey to the capitol is always the first part of the actual ceremony—was quite different from that of four years ago, for President Coolidge had no outgoing President to accompany him.

Changes of Four Years Recalled

Four years ago Warren Gamaliel Harding, a picture of robust health, so soon to pass away, rode with the pathetic figure of Woodrow Wilson, and, with deprecatory gestures to the crowd, stilled cheers intended for him, out of consideration for the already dying man who rode in the carriage beside him. Little did anyone dream that before another inauguration had rolled around Harding would have preceded Wilson to the great beyond.

While President Coolidge was at work in the President's room at the capitol, Vice President-Elect Dawes and his party arrived and took their places in the vice president's room, where they were greeted by Senator Cummins of Iowa, who since Mr. Coolidge became President has presided over the senate. There Mr. Dawes and his party awaited the beginning of the vice presidential inaugural ceremonies in the senate chamber, which preceded by a few minutes the inauguration of President Coolidge in the open air outside.

The senate galleries early had been filled by those fortunate enough to get cards of admission. Many women, scarcely less well known than their husbands in national affairs, shared places with members and families of the diplomatic corps and the official set.

Dawes Takes Oath of Office.

Just as the Sixty-eighth congress died by constitutional limitation at noon, the senate of the Sixty-ninth congress came into being, called in special session to consider executive appointments and, incidentally, to inaugurate the vice president.

A special session of the senate is really not necessary to inaugurate the vice president; he could take the oath of office before a justice of the peace if he chose, and then meet with the senate when it assembles in regular session next winter; but it is the custom.

The diplomatic corps, all invited to the ceremonies, assembled in the marble room which adjoins the chamber, resplendent in their gorgeous full-dress court uniforms. A new doyen headed them this time, Senor Riano, the Spanish ambassador. He took his place as dean with the departure of the former French ambassador, Jules J. Jusserand, who had occupied the place of honor at five previous inaugural ceremonies.

The diplomatic corps entered the chamber according to rank and precedence, fixed in order of the time they have been accredited to the United States, the ambassadors leading the line and the ministers coming after them.

Then came the justices of the Supreme court, headed by Chief Justice Taft, in their somber black silk robes of the bench, and taking chairs placed for them at the right of the incoming vice president.

Senate Chamber Crowded.

After them, members of the house of representatives entered through the main door and took places reserved for them on the west side of the chamber, while the senators gathered at their reserved places on the east.

Sprinkled among them were distinguished officers of the army and navy, a few former members of congress, and, last, persons who have publicly received the thanks of congress and, therefore, are entitled to places on such occasions.

When all the party was assembled, the senate chamber—a comparatively small room which ordinarily seats 96 senators and attaches—contained more than 700 persons on the floor, with many of them necessarily standing.

When all was ready in the chamber, President Coolidge, escorted by the committee on arrangements, was shown into the chamber through the main door, and to a seat on the floor at the right-hand side of the center aisle, and facing the rostrum, on which Vice President-elect Dawes was immediately escorted to a seat.

The senate chaplain offered a prayer, and Senator Cummins, as president of the senate, called the assemblage to order.

A silence settled over the company as Senator Cummins and the vice president-elect faced each other. Both raised their right hands, Senator Cummuins read the vice president's oath, Mr. Dawes repeated the words as they were spoken, and, as the result of this brief ceremony, the country had a vice president for the first time in 19 months.

Inauguration of the President.

The assemblage within the senate chamber thereupon began moving in order of precedence to the inaugural stand outside.

A commodious steel canopy had been erected so that President Coolidge could take the oath of office in full view of the waiting thousands, and not be compelled to go through the exercises inside the capitol building, unless the weather was unusually severe.

New Market in St. Louis Have Scales to Aid Buyers

St. Louis.—When St. Louis' new $1,350,000 union market, the second largest in the country, is turned over to public use next June it will have many unusual provisions to safeguard buyers.

One of these will be six scales, distributed at various points where buyers may make free use of them to determine whether correct weights have been given. Any discrepancies may be reported to the seller or to the marketmaster.

The building is to be of reinforced concrete with exterior of brick veneer. Only the first floor will be used as a market place, the three upper floors being reserved for public storage of automobiles, 280 to the floor. The building occupies an entire block, 270 feet long and 195 feet wide.

One of the hardest things is to know what to say to a person in sorrow, though a similar experience in one's own life helps one to find the right words, and we'd like to know what the petticoat manufacturer and a man who makes switches to match the hair are to each other when they meet.—Ohio State Journal.

have never practiced the policy mpetitive armaments. We have ly committed ourselves by cove- with the other great nations to itation of our sea power. As result of this, our navy ranks larger, in comparison, than it ever did before.

Has Faith in Parleys.

If we are to judge by past experience, there is much to be hoped for in international relations from frequent conferences and consultations.

I am strongly in favor of a continuation of this policy, whenever conditions are such that there is even a promise that practical and favorable results might be secured.

We cannot barter away our independence or our sovereignty, but we ought to engage in no refinements of logic, no sophistries, and no subterfuges to argue away the undoubted duty of this country by reason of the might of its numbers, the power of its resources, and its position of leadership in the world, actively and comprehensively to signify its approval and to bear its full share of the responsibility of a candid and disinterested attempt at the establishment of a tribunal for the administration of even-handed justice between nation and nation.

The weight of our enormous influence must be cast upon the side of a reign, not of force, but of law, and trial, not by battle, but by reason.

Peace will come when there is realization that only under a reign of law, based on righteousness and supported by the religious conviction of the brotherhood of man, can there be any hope of a complete and satisfying life. Parchment will fail, the sword will fail; it is only the spiritual nature of man that can be triumphant.

It seems altogether probable that we can contribute most to these important objects by maintaining our position of political detachment and independence.

While we can look with a great deal of pleasure upon what we have done abroad, we must remember that our continued success in that direction depends upon what we do at home.

No one would deny that there should be full and free expression and an opportunity for independence of action within the party. There is no salvation in a narrow and bigoted partisanship. But if there is to be responsible party government, the party label must be something more than a mere device for securing office.

Hits Party Disloyalty.

Common honesty and good faith with the people who support a party at the polls require that party, when it enters office, to assume the control of that portion of the government to which it has been elected. Any other course is bad faith and a violation of the party pledges.

This administration has come into power with a very clear and definite mandate from the people. The expression of the popular will in favor of maintaining our constitutional guaranties was overwhelming and decisive.

There was a manifestation of such faith in the integrity of the courts that we can consider that issue rejected for some time to come.

Likewise, the policy of public ownership of railroads and certain electric utilities met with unmistakable defeat.

The people declared that they wanted their rights to have, not a political, but a judicial, determination, and their independence and freedom continued and supported by having the ownership and control of their property, not in the government, but in their own hands. As they always do when they have a fair chance, the people demonstrated that they are sound and are determined to have a sound government.

When we turn from what was rejected to inquire what was accepted, the policy that stands out with the greatest clearness is that of economy in public expenditure with reduction and reform of taxation.

The principle involved in this effort is that of conservation. The resources of this country are almost beyond computation. No mind can comprehend them. But the cost of our combined governments is likewise almost beyond definition.

Not only those who are now making their tax returns, but those who meet the enhanced cost of existence in their monthly bills, know by hard experience what this great burden is and what it does. No matter what others may want, these people want a drastic economy. They are opposed to waste. They know that extravagance lengthens the hours and diminishes the rewards of their labor.

I favor the policy of economy, not because I wish to save money, but because I wish to save people. The men and women of this country who toil are the ones who bear the cost of the government. Every dollar that we carelessly waste means that their life will be so much the more meager. Every dollar that we prudently save means that their life will be so much the more abundant. Economy is idealism in its most practical form.

America's Problem Simple.

If extravagance were not reflected in taxation, and through taxation both directly and indirectly injuriously affecting the people, it would not be of so much consequence. The wisest and soundest method of solving our tax problem is through economy.

Fortunately, of all the great nations this country is best in a position to adopt that simple remedy. We do not any longer need wartime revenues. The collection of any taxes which are not absolutely required, which do not beyond reasonable doubt contribute to the public welfare, is only a species of legalized larceny.

Under this republic, the rewards of industry belong to those who earn them. The only constitutional tax is the tax which ministers to public necessity.

Further Tax Reduction.

The time is arriving when we can have further tax reduction, when, unless we wish to hamper the people in their right to earn a living, we must have tax reform.

The method of raising revenue ought not to impede the transaction of business; it ought to encourage it.

I am opposed to extremely high rates, because they produce little or no revenue, because they are bad for the country, and, finally, because they are wrong.

We cannot finance the country, we cannot improve social conditions, through any system of injustice, even if we attempt to inflict it upon the rich. Those who suffer the most harm will be the poor.

This country believes in prosperity. It is absurd to suppose that it is envious of those who are already prosperous.

The wise and correct course to follow in taxation and all other economic legislation is, not to destroy those who have already secured success, but to create conditions under which everyone will have a better chance to be successful.

The verdict of the country has been given on this question. That verdict stands. We shall do well to heed it.

Moral Issues Involved.

These questions involve moral issues. We need not concern ourselves much about the rights of property if we will faithfully observe the rights of persons. Under our institutions, their rights are supreme.

It is not property, but the right to hold property, both great and small, which our Constitution guarantees. All owners of property are charged with a service. These rights and duties have been revealed, through the conscience of society, to have a divine sanction.

The very stability of our society rests upon production and conservation. For individuals or for governments to waste and squander their resources is to deny these rights and disregard these obligations. The result of economic dissipation to a nation is always moral decay.

These policies of better international understandings, greater economy and lower taxes have contributed largely to peaceful and prosperous industrial relations.

Under the helpful influence of restrictive immigration and a protective tariff, employment is plentiful, the rate of pay is high, and wage earners are in a state of contentment seldom before seen. Our transportation systems have been gradually recovering and have been able to meet all the requirements of the service. Agriculture has been very slow in reviving, but the price of cereals at last indicates that the day of its deliverance is at hand.

Nation's Chief Problem.

We are not without our problems, but our most important problem is, not to secure new advantages, but to maintain those which we already possess.

Our system of government, made up of three separate and independent departments; our divided sovereignty, composed of nation and state; the matchless wisdom that is enshrined in our Constitution—all these need constant efforts and tireless vigilance for their protection and support.

This policy represents a new departure in the world. It is a thought, an ideal, which has led to an entirely new line of action. It will not be easy to maintain. Some never moved from their position, some are constantly slipping back to the old ways of thought and the old action of seizing a musket and relying on force.

America has taken the lead in this new direction, and that lead America must continue to hold. If we expect others to rely on our fairness and justice, we must show that we rely on their fairness and justice.

These are some of the principles which America represents. We have not by any means put them fully into practice, but we have strongly signified our belief in them.

America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force. No ambition, no temptation, lures her to thought of foreign dominions.

The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. The higher state to which she seeks the allegiance of all mankind is not of human, but of divine origin. She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God.

Mrs. Goodhue will remain at the White House several weeks. This is her first visit to her daughter and distinguished son-in-law since they have lived in the White House. Colonel Coolidge occupies the unique place in history of having administered the oath of office to his son when he succeeded to the Presidency upon the death of Warren Harding, and, in accepting the President's invitation to be his guest at the inaugural, said that while he was not enthusiastic about leaving Plymouth, Vt., he was anxious to be on hand for the great event. He said, however, that he did not expect to stay at the White House very long.

I have always said Office holders should be elected for life (subject, of course, to impeachment for neglect or dishonesty). Then they could give their work all of their time, instead of worrying about how to stay in, and that would do away entirely with the biggest social problem we have to face in this country. And that is the thousands of Individuals who go through life just trying to get in office. If we could get their mind off office, and get 'em to working something useful. Claud Deering Smoothed His Path of Love

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

CLAUD DEERING was as happy as a rising young doctor could be, for he was to marry Ray Clifford.

Neither of them was in their first youth. Deering was thirty and Ray had confessed that there was only a year or two between them.

And Ray had been married before.

Deering knew all about that tragedy in her life; the inexperienced girl, fascinated by the rogue who wanted the legacy that her father had left her. John Brooks was a man of the world and, having got possession of her small fortune, had left her for another woman, three months after the marriage. Later came news of his death in a brawl in a low saloon and Ray resumed her maiden name.

As Deering sat in his office, dreaming over the happiness in store for her, there came a knock at the door. A ragged tramp was standing outside.

"Doc Deering?" he inquired, with a surly scowl.

"That's right," answered the doctor, heartily. "Come in and sit down."

The man collapsed into a chair, and then Deering saw that he was in the last stage of emaciation.

"I heard—I heard that you were going to marry Ray Brooks tomorrow," he muttered. "That's why I came. I'm—I'm John, her husband."

Deering took the blow quite calmly, as a man should. He took the tramp's arm in his hands and began feeling the pulse. "You're in a bad way, my friend," he said. "You'd best go into the hospital. I'll drive you there tonight. And let me tell you, you'll have to change your manner of life if you want to pull through."

"That's all very well," sneered the man, "but you can't throw me off the scent like that. If you want to marry Ray, you're going to pay for it."

"If your statement is true," Deering answered quietly, "you have the situation in your own hands. But I'm going to take you to the hospital!"

"I'll go!" muttered the man. "But when I come out I'll make you pay."

"Miss Lennox not on duty tonight?" asked the doctor of the night nurse.

"She'll be coming on at twelve, Doctor Deering," answered the young woman.

"I'll wait for her," Deering answered. "I am rather anxious to talk with her about this case."

When the man opened his eyes Deering felt that he was growing stronger. In spite of himself, the thought would come that this wreck of flotsam would be better off dead. Why should such useless lives linger, to make only misery?

The man leered at him.

"Say, Doc," he said, "this is a mighty comfortable bed to sleep in. It's weeks since I had a bed like this. But I'm going to make you pay, just the same, if you want Ray."

A groan broke from the doctor's lips. He clenched his hands and strode up and down the room.

The sick man's eyes followed him.

"Once," he said, when Deering returned to his bedside, "you could have put that all over me. You could have won my gratitude and worked upon my better nature. But I guess I'm too old a bird to be caught by kindness. You'll pay fifteen hundred if you want Ray."

Deering turned upon him.

"Do you think I am a bigamist?" he cried. "If you are John Brooks, you've got me in your power. But you won't get a chance to torture that helpless woman again."

The man did not answer him. Deering saw his eyes fixed in terror upon something—some one on the opposite side of the room. He looked round. Miss Lennox was approaching the bed.

"Good-evening," began Deering, and stopped. There was the same look of terror upon the face of the nurse.

"Why—" the doctor began. "Why—"

"Oh, I guess she remembers me," burst out Brooks, with an oath. "She ought to. We lived together long enough for her to know my face."

"That man is my husband, doctor!" said the nurse. "Oh, why did you bring him here?"

"When did this marriage occur?" inquired Deering.

"Eight years ago," answered Miss Lennox. "Oh, why did you bring him here?"

"I didn't know, my dear," answered Deering. "I'm sorry. But he is just a patient and shall not trouble you."

"I don't know about that," answered Brooks with a snarl.

"But I know," answered Deering, sternly. "If you married Miss Lennox eight years ago, your marriage with Miss Clifford was a bigamous one."

"Well, I guess she won't like to be told she wasn't legally married," sneered Brooks.

"She will not be told," answered the doctor, quietly. "If you so much as dare to let her see your face at any time I shall have you clapped into jail for bigamy."

And then an amazing thing happened that changed his ideas of human nature. For the nurse sank down beside the man and put her arms round him and cried upon his breast.

And when Deering looked at the face of the man he saw two tears rolling down his cheeks.

Silently he went out. He knew now that his bride would never learn of the tragedy that had so nearly blighted their happiness.

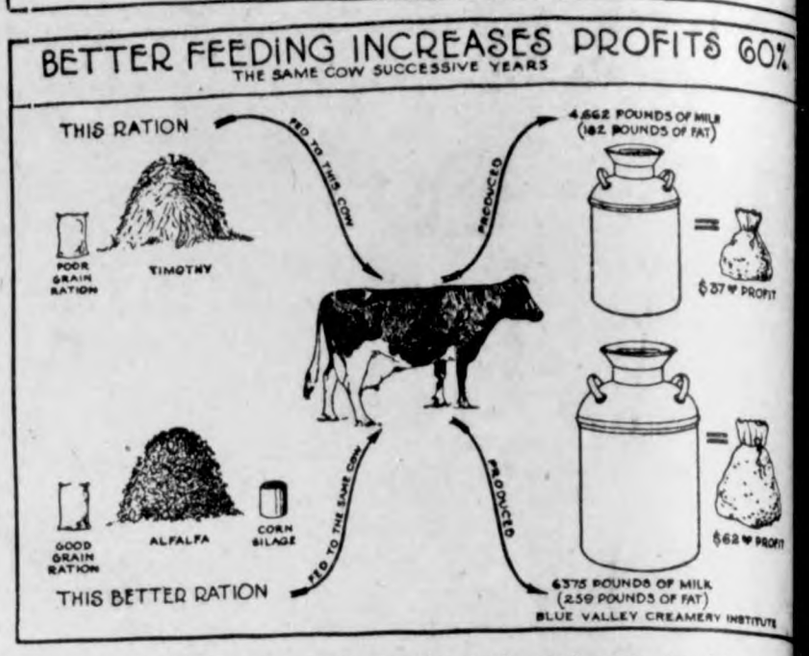
$500,000,000 Gain by Better Feed



OVER $500,000,000 extra profit can be made each year by dairy farmers through the employment of better feeding methods. This would mean a gain of about $111 for each of the four and a half million dairy farmers of the United States, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The truth of this experiment is borne out by a feeding experiment carried on during the past year by the University of Minnesota.

Over a year ago the dairy division of the university purchased four average cows for which records were available of feed received, and of milk or fat produced, covering two years for each cow. The cows received good care on the farm of the original owner but were not on a scientific feeding ration. The university immediately placed the cows on a feeding ration suitable to their needs. Within a year production per cow had increased 36.7 per cent.

On the farm of the original owner the cows produced on the average 4,662 pounds of milk containing 182 pounds of fat, the products per cow amounting to around $87.36. The feed cost totaled $49.46, leaving a profit of $37.90. At the university farm the average production was 6,375 pounds of milk, containing 259 pounds of butter fat and valued at $124.32. The average feeding cost per cow was $61.42, an increase of 24 per cent, leaving a profit per cow of $62.90. The returns over feed cost per cow gained 60 per cent over those of the two previous years.

On the owner's farm the cows were on pasture six months of the year and were fed timothy hay for roughage, plus five pounds per day of a grain mixture made up of 90 parts bran, 80 parts middling, 18 parts molasses feed and 4 parts oilmeal. At the university farm the cows were on pasture six months of the year. They were fed corn silage and alfalfa hay as roughage, plus a grain ration, according to production, made up of oats, 2 parts, corn 1 part, and barley, 1 part.

THRESHING SEASON OPENS IN PALO ALTO

The first threshing to be done in Palo Alto county has just been completed by Al Pearson, who lives a mile and a half west of Curlew. He threshed 30 stacks of oats that were harvested last August.

The grain was all of good quailty and the straw was as bright as the day it went into te stack.

The reason Mr. Pearson did not thresh earlier was because he intend ed to thresh late in the fall and his neighbors were busy husking corn and could not help him. The severe winter in December and January pre vented the threshing at that time.

FOWL CHOLERA TREATMENT

Iowa State Veternarian Tells How to Detect the Disease

One of the most highly fatal diseases of fowls is fowl cholera. It attacks all kinds of domestic fowls, but is particulary common in chicks ens. It may appear in either of two forms, the acute, in which death may occur within a few hours, or the chronic, in which te birds may linger for long periods. The acute form is the most common. The common onest symptoms are loss of appetite, diarrhoea, listlessness, drooping head and tail, darkened comb and in tense thirst . Death is frequently preceded by convulsions

The usual conditions observed in post mortem include inlarged liver, usually dark in color, due to engorgement with bood, or in the more chronic cases showing white or yellow blotches, according to Dr. Chas. Murray, chief in veterinary investigtaions, Iowa State College. The intestines are usually inflamed, with well marked hemmorrhages showing on the lining membrane. Small hemmorrhages on the heart, particularly on the fat covered portion are also common. The kidneys appear dark and swollen.

Treatment, to be effective, must be given early. Birds showing any symptoms must be immediately removed from the flock in order to lessen the danger of the disease spreading. If the flock is overcrowd ed this condition must be relieved. The droppings, which contain the germs of the disease must be remov ed daily and disposed of in a place in accessible to poultry, or by burning Medicinal treatment to be effective must be begun early.

'Secure from your veterinarian some reliable intestinal antiseptic to be given in the drinking water," is Dr. Murray's advice. Calomel tablets of two-gram size may be given, one to each bird.

HORSES NEED ATTENTION NOW

Animals Should Be Got in Shape for Heavy Spring Work

From now until spring work opens up, it will pay to give farm horses careful attenton in order that they may be fit for duty when the rush comes on. Horses which have been wintering out should be put on good feed from three to six weeks prior to heavy work, according to A .B. Caine, horse specialist, Iowa State College. Along with grain, the work horse should receive a good quality of roughage such as clover, alfalfa or mixed hay.

A good grain mixture consists of equal parts corn and oats by weight or may consist of oast, 50 per cent, corn 35 percent and grain 15 percent While horses are on light work these mixtures should be fed at the rate of one-half pound per day for each hundred pounds of live weight. On full work, the amount should be doubled.

Liberal use of the curry comb should be made to remove long hair. which otherwise will cause the animals to sweat excessievly when at work and make them susceptible to chilling while resting. Collars should be properly fitted and shoulders should be toughened by starting out heavy work gradually. Scrape collars clean of sweat and dirt each day Bathing the shoulders in salt water will assist in hardening them.

Chapter VI

—11—

Tea for Three.

It seemed to Renshaw that he had been waiting in Peacock alley since the beginning of time. In reality he had been there less than half an hour when he heard his name uttered in a cool tone that was becoming familiar to his ears.

"Why, there's Mr. Renshaw—and he appears to be asleep!"

He sprang to his feet, snatching off his hat as he did so. Verity Campbell and Madame Hvoeslef had stopped before him. For a moment the wave of humiliation that rolled over him shut out any appreciation of their expressions or their manner. They must be half frantic. They must despise him beyond words as a blundering ass—incapable even of carrying out the simplest instructions. Well, nothing they or anyone else thought of him could be worse than what he thought of himself.

"No," he said confusedly, "I wasn't asleep. I was trying to—" He broke off and turned directly to Madame Hvoeslef. "I'm wretched about this thing," he said, with an actual break in his voice. "What can I say?"

The eyes of both women were on him as he spoke, and now, with time for clearing senses, he realized that neither pair held the expression he had looked for. The eyes of Verity revealed her customary indifference, very slightly tinged with criticism. Those of the other woman, cold at first, were softening into pity as they took in the young man's haggard aspect.

"Say nothing more, Monsieur. I am distressed that you have suffered over my affairs." She was smiling as she spoke, and the smile prepared him for her next words. "Everything is—how is it said in English?—'quite all right.'"

Renshaw's eyes sent her a flash that reminded both women of a sudden blaze from a lighthouse with the lifting of a fog. It was an exhibition of hidden possibilities that startled them. Under it the older woman's expression warmed still more, and the tones of her throaty voice took on a quality they had never held for him before.

"You have been unhappy," she said. "I am so sorry!" She took a step nearer to him as she spoke, under an impulse to put a comforting hand on his arm. But his glance had dropped, and her half-raised hand dropped, too. "We, also, have been anxious," she went on gently, "but that is past. The case is safe in the vaults of the Trust company. I myself have just left it there. And this time"—her smile extended now to her brilliant eyes—"Mr. Atkins and I have both opened it to be sure it held what we thought."

Her hearer was in a state of stupefaction shot through with indescribable relief.

"But—I don't understand," he stammered.

"We ourselves do not understand. I can tell you only what has happened. When Mr. Atkins telephoned, we were riding. Hart came for us in the car. I was—" she stopped as if almost overcome by the memory of what that moment had been—"I was in despair," she went on quickly. "I rushed to my room to change for the train. And there, on my bed, was my leather case—and in it, quite safe, when I unlocked it, was—what I had put there."

"Then—you mean—you had two cases? You gave me the wrong one?"

He was trying to follow her, but something seemed wrong with his mind. She shook her head.

"No; and that is what we do not comprehend. I had one case only, the original case, made for me in"—she stopped—"in Europe," she ended abruptly. "Some one else has made another case exactly like it. We can understand why this was done. But why the original case and its contents were returned to me, after the trouble and expense of duplicating it—that, Monsieur, we cannot follow at all."

Renshaw at last took in the two points that were important.

"Then your property is safe—and I delivered the case you gave me?" he asked slowly.

"We think so. For Mr. Atkins told us it was not for one moment out of your hands. It must have been changed in my room before I brought it to you, though I had for it a strong chest with a combination lock."

Renshaw shot his glance over the heads of the passing pageant and frowned reflectingly. The black leather case and its contents were safe. His courage clung to the life-line of that knowledge. When he got back to Tawno Ker, he would take up and try to work out the tangle of the freakish and unprofitable exchange.

"So now," Madame Hvoeslef added comfortably, "we will all have a cup of tea. My affairs have caused you a bad hour, Monsieur. I deeply regret this. Let us try to forget it."

She was already leading the way into the Palm room as she spoke, leaving the young man no choice save to follow her. He did so, inwardly fuming. He had no wish to drink tea with Miss Campbell, to watch her brilliant eyes look past him, to study anew the slightly superior line of her perfect upper lip. In the Palm room, however, quite unconsciously and partly from sheer force of old-time habit, he quietly put the others in the position of being his guests.

Verity limited her participation in the social function to the aloof drinking of a cup of tea. She was oddly impressed by the naturalness with which Renshaw had put her and Madame Hvoeslef into the position of his guests, the sudden revelation of force in this man she had half-consciously despised as a weakling. The impression of strength faded when the three re-entered the famous corridor.

"You will drive back with us, Monsieur Renshaw?" Madame Hvoeslef made the suggestion, taking for granted Verity's approval of the invitation. Renshaw hesitated. His self-consciousness had again settled over him like a tight-fitting garment, trimmed with indecision.

"I—I hardly know," he stammered. "Yes, I suppose I might as well—if you have room for me—and if you have time to stop at the station for my bag—"

He was looking at Verity now, and for once she met his glance. There was a new element in her own. It was perhaps less cordiality than the absence of her usual indifference. Whatever it was, it was human. So, too, was her reply.

"Of course we have room," she said carelessly. "We came in the limousine."

He followed them in silence to that luxurious vehicle. Hart and a strange chauffeur stood together beside it, lost to their surroundings in the charm of a confidential conversation. As the little party reached him, Hart straightened and saluted. He turned at once to Verity.

"I beg pardon, Miss," he said deferentially. "But would you mind if this man—Henry Rickett, he is—drives you home tonight? I know it's unusual, but I got bad news in town—of a pers'nal nature," he interrupted himself to explain—"an' I got to be here till tomorrow, if you can get along without me."

"Why—I suppose so, Hart." Verity hesitated, glancing uncertainly from her chauffeur to the proposed substitute. "Does he know the way?"

"Yes'm. An' he knows the car, too."

Verity stepped back to allow Madame Hvoeslef to precede her into the limousine.

"Very well," she said indifferently. "Thank you, Miss. I'll be out on the train by tomorrow noon."

Both women were in the car, obviously waiting for Renshaw to follow them. He did so, after a perceptible hesitation, closing the door and taking a seat facing them. Darkness was falling, and the limousine made its way slowly through the crowded streets, stopping at the station for Renshaw's bag. Twice the new chauffeur was the object of winged rebukes from traffic policemen. He seemed not to know the traffic rules as well as he knew the car and the road. Indeed, Renshaw soon began to suspect that he did not know even these as well as Hart's encomium would lead one to believe. Several times he hesitated at turns. Also, the gears of the car protested raucously each time he shifted them.

Madame Hvoeslef talked in her casual, charming way, with a new and intriguing note of friendliness, and Renshaw responded. He was conscious of an increased and growing liking for this polished product of another land. He even ceased to resent her air of mystery. Certainly she had been a thoroughbred today in the consideration she had shown him and apparently she had left her atmosphere of mystery in the safe-deposit box with her recovered treasure. Above all, he admired the tact with which she avoided all allusion to her own affairs or to his.

A sudden jolt startled him, then another. The car had lurched and recovered itself. The first snowfall of the season was beginning, and very soon the heavy flakes were coming down so thickly as to cloud vision. The new chauffeur was having difficulty in keeping to the road.

Suddenly Renshaw leaned forward and addressed the girl.

"Miss Campbell," he said crisply, "this fellow doesn't know how to drive. Do you mind if I get out and take the wheel?"

Verity looked startled. In her absorption it was clear that she had not observed the jolts or the driver's repeated hesitation at crossroads.

"Why, aren't we almost there?" she asked, vaguely looking about her.

"No; we're not much more than half way. And it's snowing hard, and the new man doesn't know the road. There are some nasty spots between here and Tawno Ker." Renshaw's voice grew more incisive. "I really think you'd better let me drive," he finished.

For a few seconds Verity was silent. When she spoke, her words revealed the character of her thoughts.

"Drive, by all means," she murmured, "if you would feel more comfortable."

Renshaw felt the blood rush to his head. The remark itself he accepted as an insult. Also, it reminded him of something he had forgotten. His muscles grew lax under the impulse to sit back and let the ass at the wheel ditch them all, if he had to. Then, quietly, he tapped on the window to stop the car, and when the driver obeyed the signal, he got out and raised the young man from his seat with a single and compelling gesture.

"It's so thick you can't see," he said casually, as he took the wheel. "I know the road."

The chauffeur took the seat beside him without protest, muttering something about snow in his eyes. Renshaw drove in silence for ten minutes, then stopped abruptly beside a small wooden structure whose one lighted window shone mistily through the storm.

"This is the Ardville station," he told the substitute. "A train for New York stops here in about half an hour."

He offered the man a bill as he spoke, but the chauffeur shrank away.

"Say," he muttered peevishly, "what's the idea?"

Renshaw spoke pleasantly, but his voice had hardened: "I'm sorry if you have a date with one of the maids, but the best thing you can do tonight is to get back to town. You can see the girl later."

"I'm d—d if I will," muttered the man. "What right you got to butt in? It's the lady that engaged me."

"That's true but she has just told me to take your place. Come, now." At the last two words the man started. The tone was new and menacing. "I'll give you exactly one minute to get down and away. Don't forget this." He was still holding out the bill, and at last the man took it.

"Oh, all right," he said grumpily, "if that's the way you feel about it. I was only tryin' to help out a pal."

"Very creditable of you, I'm sure. Good-night."

Renshaw started the car, but his eyes were on the man. "Toddle right into the nice warm station," he advised.

The man drifted languidly toward the station door. He had thrust the bill into his pocket, and he seemed annoyed but philosophic. Shut away from the drift of the conversation, though within sound of the men's voices, the two inside the limousine watched the scene.

"He's sending him back to New York," Verity interpreted, with a flush of annoyance. "That young man is taking a great deal upon himself. If I had realized what he meant to do—"

She stopped to give an appreciative mind to the perfection of Renshaw's driving. It was as perfect a thing as Hart's, and this was superlative praise.

"He can drive, anyway," she conceded.

The limousine stopped with a jerk. Renshaw leaped from his place and hurried around to the back of the car. Opening the door and leaning out to discover what had happened, Verity caught his words. They were a trifle hurried. He had pursued for a few feet and had caught something that was vigorously protesting against the capture.

"Come, now," said Renshaw. "This is getting annoying, you know. You're a lot keener on that maid than I thought you were."

"Leggo me," responded another breathless but urgent voice.

The owner of the voice seemed to be getting a violent shaking. His words came out in gasps that suggested this. By looking through the window at the rear, Verity now had an excellent moving picture of the scene.

"The chauffeur we thought we left at the station merely ran after the car and hung on," she reported to Madame Hvoeslef. Both received the full benefit of Renshaw's next words:

"I'm inclined to give you a good thrashing."

"Aw, come off; I'll beat it," the other hopefully suggested.

"All right. Let's see how fast you can beat it down that road."

The fellow started, but his movements were not swift enough to satisfy the exacting observer. The latter gave an order, and made a movement as if to follow him, and the man broke into a lope. For a minute or two Renshaw watched him, till the running form was lost to view. Then, abruptly shutting the car door, and ignoring his passengers as absolutely as if they were not there, he resumed his place at the wheel and the car swept on through the storm.

In the driveway leading up to Tawno Ker, Verity spoke for the first time in half an hour.

"Mr. Renshaw takes entirely too much upon himself," she observed between set teeth.

The words were addressed as much to herself as to the other woman. Madame Hvoeslef answered them with a polite confirmatory murmur that ended in a confidence.

"But nevertheless I am becoming interested in this new secretary, my dear. It grows clear to me as I watch him that he is not what we thought at first, slow-minded and a little dull. I think," she thoughtfully added, "your Monsieur Renshaw has somewhere in him a good deal of a man."

Health and good looks

—the reward of internal cleanliness.

IF YOU do not keep clean internally your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks and insomnia, each of which saps your health and vitality.

Avoid Laxatives—say Doctors

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. SIMPLICITY IN JUNIOR COATS; ENSEMBLE COSTUME IN FAVOR

JUST because one happens to have not yet reached her teens is no sign that one is not tremendously interested in latest fashions. Indeed, juniors have an all-enthusiastic, convincing way of announcing to mother that "everybody's wearing so and so, and I want one just exactly like it."

Keen perception, when it comes to observing details, is one of childhood's chief accomplishments. When little daughter looks over your shoulder as you are reading these words she will no doubt point to this picture calling your attention to such subtle details as the slit side pockets, not "set on" ones. Perhaps she will remind you that the coat is single-breasted, and that stitching and round buttons are the only trimming. However, as to color, Little Miss may have to draw upon her imagination unless mother reads to her the latest fashion report which says tan, reindeer, brown, copen, are all in the list of favorites and oh, joy of joys, bright red coats are just as stylish as they can be. Plaid coats, strictly tailored, are also very popular this spring. So prospects are for colorful coats.

There are some fascinating models of tweed in rose, tan, lavender and pastel blue shades, which have deep revers faced with contrasting flannel. Tweeds, flannels and cheviots are all featured for children's wraps. Some of the older girls' coats have flat velvet collars.

In general lines and finish of coats for Miss Ten and Miss Twelve there is a disposition to simulate grown-up modes. The flare so fashionable in coats for older folks, is noted in quite a few junior wraps.

We may solve the cross-word puzzle, we may play a winning game of mah-jongg, but to discuss fashion without making the costume ensemble the central theme around which all style revolves, who would attempt the impossible?

All the modish world pays homage this season to the two or three-piece costume, whose relationship is established by virtue of fabric, color and design. The more we see of these matching outfits the more we enthuse over them. Stylists have sensed the artfulness of a coat lining of the same material as one's frock or tunic blouse, and the idea is being featured.

Perhaps no fabric lends itself more enchantingly to these belong-together dresses and coats than do the now-so-fashionable gay printed crepes. What if the color of most of these fantastic prints be flamboyant or their patterning overbold, are they not to be worn under coats of most sedate and proper cloth, satin or silk? As an illustration of a composite costume in its most intriguing mood, study the picture herewith. The frock and lining of the coat are of printed crepe in beige, brown and the new cornelian color. For the coat in long tuxedo effect which completes this costume ensemble, cornelian colored charmeen is the fabric selected. The vogue for plaits, which, by the way, are used on practically all types of frocks this season, is interpreted very pleasingly by the crepe frock which shows this treatment from neck to hem.

Excepting the tailored kind, elaborateness is the keynote of many of these spring costume ensembles. Linings were never more fanciful, for linings, be it known, are meant to be seen. It is part of the play to "accidentally on purpose" throw back the coat in such a way as to reveal fascinating glimpses of its lining. In the instance of an imported frock gracing a recent fashion show, the gown was of blond georgette, the lining of the coat repeating the fabric. That this coat was of heavy black silk ottoman is significant. It is a suggestion worth considering by home dressmaker or by the woman of fashion who values hints as to what to buy, this of using practical black for the wrap, indulging in color and daintiness for the frock and lining.

WITH OUR ADVERTISERS

It was Wednesday, the day for raisin bread. He was worried, for he knew that since one thousand men voted on what millions wanted most in a shaving cream there was no longer an excuse for a dingy film on the teeth. Although he knew that it was much better than the average ten cent smoke he wondered which one of the fifty-seven varieties to buy. As he walked across McCall street he instinctively jumped out of the way of the world's finest automobile before he realized that no metal could touch him. The worried look increased and he told himself that he could use the extra fifty dollars a month and wondered if after all good old wasn't cheaper. As he entered the office he caught a glimpse of himself in the hall mirror and was convinced after all that clothes do make the man. But, alas the insidious part of it was that not even his closest friends would tell him yet he was certain that if he wore his garters around his neck he would change them oftener.

CIGARETTES ARE INJURIOUS

"Fag" Puffers Get Lower Grades, Check Discloses

Interesting figures upon the prevalence of smoking among high school youths and the comparative grades of smokers and non-smokers have been compiled by the Hi-Y club f the Iowa City High School under the leadership of Robert Hannelly, their faculty adviser.

Grades for the first twelve weeks of the current school year disclose the fact that in each of the four cless es non-smokers had a higher grade average than the boys wo indulged in "fags". Sixty-three per cent of the boys do not smoke, according to a questionaire filled out after the boys had been assured that neither school officials nor their parents would have access to the original data.

In the senior class, non-smokers' grades were 2.3 per cent better than the grades of the smokers, the latter averaging 81.9 per cent. Junior non smokers had a grade average of 84.9 per cent, 3 8 per cent above that of the smokers. Sophomore non-smokers, with 82.5 per cent, and freshmen non-smokers with 81 per cent each excelled their classmates who are smokers by 4.5 per cent.

The highest grade of the 255 boys examined was made by a Sophomore non-smoker, the second highest by a Junior non-smoker. A senior smoker ranked fourth.

The non-smokers also were at the bottom of the list, however, the lowest grade being made by a Freshman non-smoker, the next by a sophomore smoker. The senior class had the largest percentage of confessed smokers, 44 per cent. The juriors were next with 38 percent, the sophomors third with 30 per cent, and the freshman fourth with 2 9per cent.

KITE FLYERS BEWARE

The month of March with its fresh winds and mild weather always is heralded by the boy as kite flying season.

This sport, however, has a very serious attendant danger and electric companies are issuing their annual warning in this connection.

Severl fatalities and many serious accidents resulted in Iowa last year from kites becoming tangled in high voltage power lines. The most dangerous practice in kite flying is the use of fine wire as a string. If this wire comes in contact with a high voltage line, the current will be immediately conducted to the person flying the kite, with sometimes fatal results. Many times boys get their kites entangled in the wres and try to climb the poles to extricate them. This is another dangerous practice and parents are urged to warn their children against it.

Kites should not be flown in the vicinity of any power lines. If a kiet becomes entangled in a wire it should be abanded. Many companies in order to avoid accidents have vilunteered to rescue the unfortunate toys.

Musk Oxen Muskless

The musk ox of North America is a true connecting link between wild cattle and sheep. It has horns like the wild Cape buffalo of Africa, cattle-like hoofs, and its flesh looks and tastes like beef.

It has next its body a dense coat of soft, clean woolly hair, and through this grows a rain coat of very long, straight brown hair like that of the Tibetan yak. It has a tail so short and small that the animal seems tailless.

The horns meet in a broad base over the top of the skull, drop far down then sharply curve upward for several inches, terminating in sharp points. They are specially designed for puncturing the vitals of wolves and polar bears.

The musk ox lives and thrives even up to the farthest north for hoofed animals, says the Detroit News. Its supply of "musk" and its "musky" odor are both wholly imaginary.

Birds as Prophets

In early days superstitious people paid considerable attention to the birds and their different cries, which were believed to foretell events. Thus comes the old saying, "A little bird told me." Traces of this belief are to be found in our own Old Testment, where verse 20, of chapter 10, of Ecclesiastes, speaks of "for a bird of the air shall carry the voice and that which hath wings shall tell the matter." It is generally agreed that it is from this belief in the universal knowledge of birds, which, of course, are supposed to see everything from the sky—that we get this saying.

THREE ROAD PLANS BEFORE ASSEMBLY

SOME PROGRESSIVE ROAD LEGISLATION NOW ASSURED—FED-AID SAVED TO STATE.

With the introduction of the bill for the $85,000,000 road bond issue in the Iowa legislature the Forty-first general assembly will have before it three road programs.

In addition to the bond issue program which would pave the primary roads of the state within a period of eight years, there are Governor Hammill's proposal and the bills recommended by the joint highways committees of the house and senate.

Governor Hammill is against a bond issue. He wants a 3-cent gasoline tax. His plan would pave the primary roads in fourteen or fifteen years, he estimates.

The highway committee bills would provide a new method of distributing the automobile fees and also contemplates a gas tax, and appears to favor a 2-cent tax.

All three of these plans would save federal aid by giving the state highway commission full jurisdiction over primary roads.

There is a big group of legislators who say with confidence that the present legislature will not pass a bond issue bill, although progressive road legislation is expected.

The road issue is looming larger than at any previous time in the session and battles are ahead on the income tax, banking regulations, appropriations, and possibly revival of the bills on taxation recommended by the special tax committee which reported to the Fortieth general assembly.

There is now talk of making a call of the senate for the remainder of the session which will require every senator to be present at every session before business can proceed unless excused by a vote of the senate.

KILLS 35% CLAUSE

Twenty-three republicans and five democrats in the Iowa senate carried approval of the repeal of the 35 per cent clause in the primary election law over opposition of twenty-two republicans to a straight plurality nomination primary law. The primary election law has been a subject of attack for many sessions since its adoption in 1908 because of the requirement that a successful candidate receive at least 35 per cent of the votes cast for the office for which he is a candidate to secure the nomination. Failing to receive 35 per cent has meant that the nomination went to convention.

CHILD LABOR BILL LOST

The Iowa legislature will not ratify the proposed federal child labor amendment. A report on the amendment recommending indefinite postponement was adopted by the house constitutional amendments committee by a vote of 8 to 3. The proposed amendment will never reach the senate, as the house will unquestionably adopt the committee report, thus killing all chance for ratification at this session of the legislature.

NEW PRIMARY ELECTION LAW.

A universal primary election bill, providing for the nomination of every candidate from president down to postmaster by popular vote has been introduced in the house of the Iowa legislature. The bill is patterned closely after the South Dakota law. It contains the provisions for debate, requiring a presidential debate, by proxy if necessary, and candidates for governor to partake in twelve.

GETTING DOWN TO BUSINESS

The work of the Iowa legislature in the present session has reached its peak load. Initial votes are scheduled to be taken on important issues such as highways, including the gasoline tax, banking, in which field the proposal for state guaranty of bank deposits is holding the spotlight, the state income tax bill and two bills proposing changes in the primary election law.

WOULD CUT AUTO LICENSE

A bill to revise and reduce annual fees on motor cars has been introduced in the senate. The measure provides that the department of the secretary of state shall fix the annual fee, rather than the executive council as at present. One provision allows $1 to be deducted each year in renewing the license on a car from the amount paid in the previous year in licensing the car.

DRASTIC LIQUOR BILL PASSED

The house has passed one of the liquor bills, which will make, in the event the measure is signed by the governor, possession of liquor as much a crime as the sale of it. The vote was 77 to 9. The house committee on intemperance's bill necessitating labeling of liquor shipments, without regard for its use, also was adopted.

It is estimated that $200,000 worth of automobiles are junked in Guthrie county each year.

The contractor who is constructing a power dam across the Cedar river at Mitchell at a cost of nearly $300,000 reports that with favorable conditions he will have the dam completed in July as the work is about half completed now.

Due to the increasing number of applications to hold tag days in Des Moines, the city council put the lid down tight and passed a resolution limiting the number in the city to one every three months.

ISLE OF PINES PACT RATIFIED

Senate Action Confirming Title to Cuba Ends Old Controversy.

Washington.—By a vote of 63 to 14, the senate ratified the Isle of Pines treaty, which fixes the ownership of the island with the Republic of Cuba. The ratification of the treaty settles a controversy which has been on ever since the end of the Spanish war, and the treaty has been pending before the senate since March 3, 1904, when it was submitted by President Roosevelt.

Ratification of the treaty was desired by the Coolidge administration, in part to promote friendly relations with Cuba and in part to promote good relations with all of Latin America. The senate decided on ratification in the face of efforts of the opposition to prevent a vote at this session and despite strong protests from the Americans on the Isle of Pines and owning property there, who fear their rights will not be regarded by the Cuban government.

Borah's Reservation Adopted.

A two-thirds vote was needed to ratify the treaty. There was not only the needed number but a large group of votes to spare. The senate, however adopted a reservation proposed by Senator Borah intended to make the provisions of the Platt amendment apply to the Isle of Pines as well as Cuba and another reservation by Senator Reed of Missouri intended to assure for Americans on the Isle of Pines rights accorded to foreigners who receive the most favored nation treatment in Cuba.

The treaty was signed March 2, 1904 by John Hay, secretary of state, and Gonzale de Quesada, then Cuban minister.

Wheat Suffers Greatest Break in History of Board

Chicago.—Wheat suffered the greatest break in the history of the Chicago Board of Trade on an unprecented turnover of grain and without any news to account for it in Friday's trading. May wheat prices here were 14¼ cents to 15 cents a bushel lower than on Thursday when the close came, with the day's bottom 39 cents under the high point of the season.

The veterans of the wheat pit could not recall such a disastrous fluctuation in grain, even in the memorable Leiter deal of 1898, which up to now has been more or less a yard stick of sensation in Board of Trade affairs.

Jury Finds Stokes Not Guilty of Defaming Wife

Chicago.—The first lucky day that W. E. D. Stokes has had since he started legal fisticuffs with his wife five years ago was on Friday—the thirteenth.

He was acquitted in 61 minutes by a jury of having conspired to defame the character of Mrs. Helen Ellwood Stokes and to drag her name through the fleshpots of Chicago's old underworld.

Robert Lee, negro, investigator hired by Stokes to carry on what the state said was a fiendish design and what the defense said was a goose chase, also was freed.

DR. KARL JARRES

COOLIDGE GREETS NEW GERMAN ENVOY

Says Republic Is Once More in Path of Prosperity.

Washington.—Declaring that Germany was once more set in the path of prosperity and peace, President Coolidge officially welcomed Baron Ago von Maltzan, the new German ambassador, and expressed the hope that he would profit by a study of our experience of a century and a half of democratic government.

The new representative of Germany thanked the President for the work of American citizens in the economic and financial reconstruction of his country.

"I gracefully recall the generous activities of American citizens in social and cultural help, and the far-seeing work of financial and economic reconstruction, bearing an American name which has become historical," he said.

"The last order of the deceased President of the reich was to express to you, Mr. President, his feelings of high personal esteem and his sincere wish for the welfare of the United States of America."

"It is for you to interpret to America the just aspirations of your nation," said President Coolidge in reply. "It is for you to promote the understanding which is the only sound basis of lasting peace.

"We have a long history as a republic, and we hope that you may profit by a study of our experience of a century and a half of democratic government.

"President Ebert succeeded because his vision was clearly fixed on right and duty, because he was a man naturally of great ability and had within him year by year a greater force. He succeeded also because he had the support of men and of good will."

Woman Says Ex-Grid Star Gave Her Poison

Kansas City, Mo.—In the face of the woman's dying accusation that he poisoned her, R. M. Turner, former Kansas university football star, steadfastly maintained his innocence of the mysterious death of Mrs. Dora Gage of Atchison, Kan.

Mrs. Gage, fifty, was found dying in a room in a hotel here.

Two maids who forced an entrance to the room said Turner, thirty-two, stood beside her adjusting his necktie before a mirror. "He is killing me," the women quoted Mrs. Gage as saying. "He wants my life insurance. He made me drink poison. He just threw the bottle out of the window." Turner was arrested.

Mrs. Gage was divorced three years ago from William Gage, a resident of Illinois.

First President of China Dead at Peking

Peking.—Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, first President of the Chinese republic, and recently President of the South China republic, with Canton as its capital, died here. Doctor Sun became ill with liver complaint shortly after his arrival here early in the winter for a conference at which it was hoped that a united China could be re-established. Doctor Sun was looked upon as the leader of the more radical elements in China, but denied that he had embraced communism.

Doctor Sun was twice named to the highest constitutional office in China—the first time in the fall of 1911, when he was proclaimed the first provisional President of the Chinese republic, and again in May, 1921, when he was elected President of all China.

SENATE REJECTS CHARLES WARREN

Vice President Reaches Chamber Too Late to Prevent Defeat.

Washington.—Lack of just one vote, which could have been supplied by Vice President Dawes had he been present, resulted in the rejection by the senate of Charles Beecher Warren for attorney general.

With a roll call allowing 40 for confirmation and 40 against, President Pro Tempore George H. Moses fought vainly against stentorian demands from the Democrats that the vote be announced, while messengers searched frantically for Vice President Dawes, who was known to be in the Capitol building.

Senator Reed of Peensylvania hurriedly changed his vote from aye to no as it was realized that a tie vote under the senate rules means rejection. This made the vote 41 for rejection to 39 for confirmation, but it enabled Senator Reed to move that the vote be reconsidered. This attempt to gain time failed also, however, for Senator Walsh moved to table this motion.

At this point Senator Overman of North Carolina, the only Democrat who had voted for confirmation, moved back to his party alignment, and voted to lay on the table.

Nine Republicans and one Farmer-Labor member, Senator Shipstead, joined all of the Democrats present but one, Senator Overman, in voting Mr. Warren down. These were Borah of Idaho, Brookhart of Iowa, Couzens of Michigan, Frazier and Ladd of North Dakota, McMasters and Norbeck of South Dakota, Johnson of California and Norris of Nebraska. The vote came at the end of a debate in which attacks were made on the Michigan man for his connection with the sugar trust and particularly with the late H. O. Havemeyer.

Old-timers asserted that this is the first time a President has been refused senatorial approval of his own choice for his official family for nearly sixty years.

Decision on the confirmation was reached after five o'clock following a long and vitriolic debate and bitter attack on Mr. Warren because of his relations to the so-called trust. Senators Walsh of Montana, and Reed of Missouri led in these attacks.

The close of the struggle and the voting was dramatic in the extreme with excitement intense.

In explanation of the absence of Vice President Dawes, it was said he had been told by the leaders on both sides there would be no vote in the afternoon. He came into the chamber from his office just after the tabling of the motion to reconsider had been announced and took the chair, but it was too late.

Shepherd and Wife Held in McClintock Death Quiz

Chicago.—William D. Shepherd was taken to the state's attorney's office in technical arrest to face sensational new evidence in connection with the death of his ward, William Nelson McClintock, who died of typhoid fever in Shepherd's home and left to Shepherd the bulk of his vast estate.

Practically all of the new evidence was given by Dr. Charles C. Faiman, head of the National University of Sciences. His chief statements were:

1. That he taught Shepherd how to recognize typhoid germs under the microscope.

2. That he taught Shepherd how such germs could be administered to a person in food.

3. That Shepherd asked if they could be injected without danger of detection and that the answer was negative.

4. That Shepherd paid him $50 to regain possession of the letter which was the only written evidence of Shepherd's interest in bacteriology.

5. That when he accused Shepherd of stealing test tubes containing typhoid germs, Shepherd merely laughed and said, "You will be taken care of."

27 CONVENTION MAY GO TO PARIS

uthorization by the national executive committee to National Commander es A. Drain of the American Le- n to appoint a France convention vel committee has given impetus to ovement to hold the 1927 conven- of the Legion in Paris.

ommander Drain had suggested the year 1927 would be very suit- e to hold the convention in France. at year marks the tenth anniver- y of America's entry into the World r and also of the landing on French of the first units of the A. E. F. It d previously been suggested that the 8 convention be held in Paris. Final ision rests with the national con- tion.

THE LEGION

AUTHOR WOOLLEY, nationally known speaker, is extolling the American Legion in a series of addresses throughout the country. Speaking at Ogden, Utah, recently he said:

"The American Legion is one of the greatest organizations in the country and the most select fraternity in the world. The President of the United States in his message to congress recommends that congress be guided by the American Legion in all matters concerning the ex-service men. . . . Every piece of legislation beneficial to the ex-service men was sponsored and pushed by the Legion. . . . In the minds of those who formed the American Legion were the ties of friendship, the spirit of service in the hour of need, the love of country and a feeling of patriotism. . . . The Legion will keep alive the memories of the great war and thus remove the inevitableness of war. . . . By not forgetting the horrors of the last war, we can avoid future wars."

Forests Advocated as Memorials to Heroes

National "memory forests" as the most enduring and practical memorials the nation can dedicate to its dead of the World war were advocated by P. . Anderson, state agriculturist, in an address.

Mr. Anderson, a World war veteran and a member of the American Legion, declared:

"We of the American Legion were able to get first-hand information regarding what provision the older countries have made regarding their timber supply. Europe has commercial forests. A timber shortage is inevitable in this country unless reforestation is done widely—why not memory forests which will perpetuate the memory of our boys enduringly . . . ."

The American Legion, both in national and state conventions, has pledged itself to a program of conservation and reforestation.

Wins Millions, but Continues Work

George Campbell Carson, miner, prospector, inventor and self-styled "desert rat," doesn't let his sudden millions, a arded, by decision regarding his improvements in copper smelting and refining processes, by the Supreme court, "bother him." He just figures to keep on inventing and is seen in his little laboratory, continuing his metallurgical experiments. Carson says "no flapper will get me."

There was a dumb Fresman on the R. O. T rifle team the other day. He wasted fifty rounds of ammunition, but didn't even graze the bullseye. The captain got sore.

"You can't hit the side of an elephant! Go off behind that tree and shoot yourself in the head!"

The Freshman faded from sight. There was a lapse of a few minutes and then a shot was heard in the direction of the tree. The captain went white, and sprinted wildly toward it. Just as he reached it a powder smoked face peered around the trunk, and the Freshman came to attention.

"Sorry, sir!" he reported. "Another miss!"

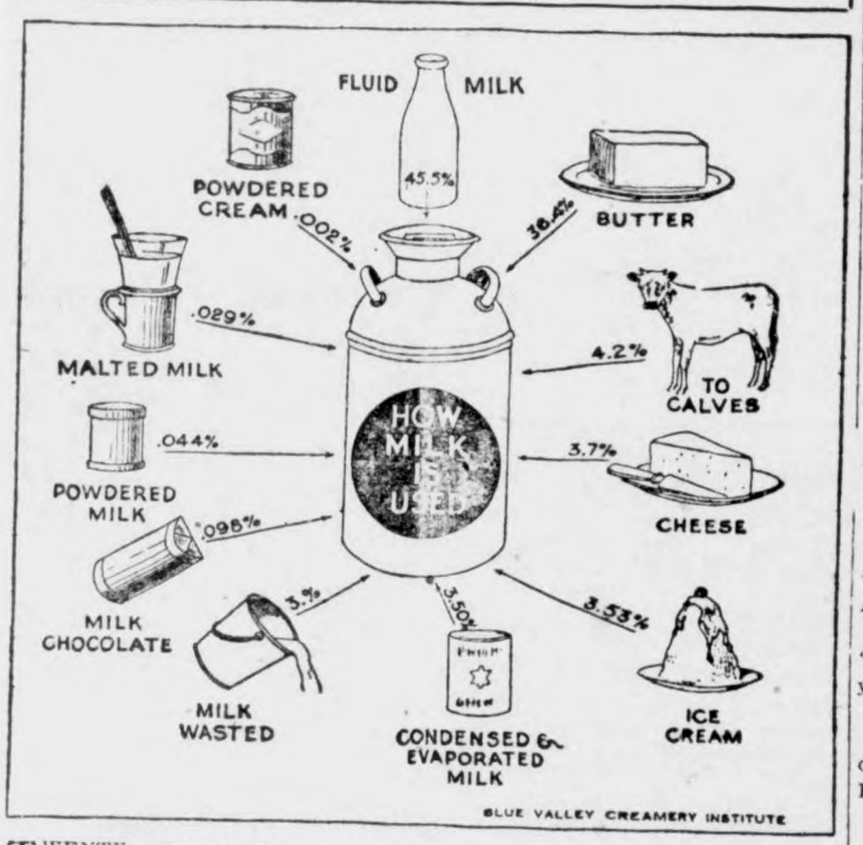
ORIGIN OF THE EDITOR

A little boy was required to write an essay the other day and "The Newspaper' 'was thes ubject. Here is the result: "I don't know how newspapers came to be in the world. I don't think God does either. He ain't got nothin' to say 'bout them, and the editor ain't in the Bible. I think the editor is one of the missing links you hear about and stayed in the brush until after the flood, then stepped out and wrote it up, and has been there ever since. I don't think he ever dies. I never saw a dead one, and never heard of one getting licked. Our paper is a mighty poor 'un. The editor goes without underclothes all winter, don't wear no sox, and pa ain't paid his subscription in five years and don't expect to."—Springfield Advance Press.

How Nation's Milk Is Used



TWENTY cents out of every food dollar is spent for dairy products. Milk or milk products are used in almost every dish included in the daily meal, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute.

Latest statistics prepared by the bureau of dairying of the Department of Agriculture show that 45.5 per cent of the American milk production, or almost one hundred billion pounds, is used directly in the form of milk. It is estimated that every man, woman and child consumes on an average of 50 gallons of milk each year. This is an increase of eight gallons over the 1917 per capita consumption figures.

The nation is eating more butter as well as drinking more milk. Per capita consumption of butter averages around 16.5 pounds, while in 1918 the average was but 14.6 pounds. More than one-fourth of the yearly milk supply is made into butter, 23.6 per cent of this is turned out as a commercial product.

Americans are not big cheese eaters. The average consumption is less than 3.7 pounds per capita. Only 3.7 per cent of the annual milk production is made in cheese. Condensed milk consumption has more than doubled since 1920 when the average consumption was six pounds per capita. Today the average consumption is 12.69 per capita.

Condensed milk plants last year absorbed 3.5 per cent of the milk produced. Ice cream takes about the same amount. Calves drink around 4.2 per cent. Less than 2 per cent of the year's milk supply is used for such miscellaneous products as powdered milk and cream, malted and canned milk and milk chocolate. It is estimated that around 3 per cent is wasted or lost.

BEING A DAMPHOOL IN NOT A CRIME

Los Angeles Times— Because a Kentucky schoolboy painted his cheeks his teacher beat him. Then the boy had the teacher arrested and the court fined him for administering the whipping.

Equal rights, that. There doubtless were half-a-dozen girls with painted cheeks in the same schoil whom the teacher neve rthought of whipping. He looked on painting a feminine priviledge. He didn't believe in equality of the sexes. He thought for a boy to do what the girls had been doing right along was pernicious.

No doubt, the whpping was unnecessary. The boy effeminate enough to do such a thing probably received all the punishment he deserved from his fellow students—of both sexes. In all probability the girls were more scornful than the boys of his attempts to beautify his complexions.

The boy will have to work through a long indeterminate sentence before he can find himself classed as a genuine "he."

Yet the justice of the case is clear If the girls want to realize justh ow lowering a thing painting is, let them imagine their brothers and sweethearts roughed up like Christmas dolls. Nothing wicked about it, but what insipidity of character it denotes! It's no use arguing that all the best people do it. Only part of the best do it.

NEW SEED VARIETIES OFFERED

Iowa Agricultural Experiment Association Offers Hubam, Dalea and Iogren Oats

Seed for three new farm crop varieties are being offered this spring by the Iowa Agicultural Experiment Association to farmers who wish to try these varieties for experimental purposes in different sections of the state. Limited amounts of a new strain of Hubam clover will be sent to farmers who get their applications in before the supply is exhausted. The strains are developements of the Iowa Experimental Station. A small fee is charged to cover actual cost. Applications should be made to Joe. L. Robinson, secretary, Ames Iowa.

The new strain of Hubam clover is remarkably vigorous and uniform, slightly later in maturity than common strains and makes a larger growth in the same length of time. Since it is being offered for the first time only one pound will be sent to one individual. The fee is $1. Necessary inocculation material is sent with the seed sample.

Two pound trial lots of dalea also being offered for the purpose of securing information concerning its adaptability to dfferent parts of the state. In some sectons during the past year dalea promsed to be a considerable value as a green manure crop, particular on lighter less fertile soils. Seventy-five cents covers thec ost of seed and inoculaon material.

Iogren oats, a midseason variety selected from Green Russian, is being distributed in three bushel lots at a cost of $3.00 This amount is sufficient to enable the person receiving the sample to compare it with the variety already being grown and to determine the relative adaptability and usefulness of the two varieties for his particular conditions.

During the past three years Iogren has been grown on 149 farms in different parts of the state and has yielded an average of 3.48 bushels more per acre that the home variety with which it was compared. Iogren seems especially promising since on many of these farms it was compared with high yielding varieties such as Iowa 103, Iowa 105, and Iowar, which had been distributed previously and had been demonstrated their superiority over the common home varieties at that time.

EMBARGO LIFTED ON IOWA POULTRY

Des Moines, Iowa, March 19, —The embargo, which New York has had against the shipment of live poultry from Iowa has been lifted, according to information which has been received by the Iowa Department of Agriculture. This makes it possible for the poultry producers of Iowa to ship their poultry into every state.

"The splendid co-operation which the poultry interests of Iowa have given to this department in the clean-up work and the fact that no fowl plague was found in Iowa has made it possible to get this embargo lifted" stated M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture.

The only restrictions which the shippers must observe at present are the Bureau of Animal Industry order 291, which requires cleaning and disinfection of all cars, coops and containers under supervision of a federal inspector and such other regulations as are ordered by the state officials of the state into which the poultry are shipped.

RABID DOGS FOUND RUNNING AT LARGE AT RENWICK

Last Saturday morning one small dog made the rounds of the town, fighting with every dog he met and seemingly having a mania for attacking chickens, having killed several at different places. The authorities were notified of the behavior of the animal and went in search of, him, but he had attacked P. H. Thiel's chickens in the meantime and Pete had protected his property with a shot gun and with disastrous results for the dog. The head was sent to Iowa City and the report showed that the dog was infected wih rabies.

It is thought that a strange dog, which passed through here several weeks ago and scrapped with all the dogs he encountered, must have spread the infection.

Several of the dogs about town have died or been very sick recently and it was thought that they were poisoned, but is is now presumed that they were also infected.

The town council held a special meeting on Tuesday night and ordered all dogs to be kept confined until further notice and Marshall Yeoman was ordered to shoot any dog found running at large whether it were licensed or not.

Most of the owners of dogs have children and have voluntarily stated that they will kill their dogs at once. This would seem to be the best remedy, as practically every dog in Renwick has had a chance to become infected.

The people of Renwick and vicinity consider themselves very fortunate that no human beings were bitten by any of these dogs.—Renwick Times.

There has been a great many tramp dogs around Klemme for the psst weeks, which should be disposed of before we have an attack similiar to Renwicks'. We have noticed many dogs without license tags which are a menace to the public safety.

WHITEWASH

In the spring it is important that the chicken houses be properly cleaned and disinfected. In addition to the need, from a sanitary standpoint the cleaning and disinfecting helps to destroy mites and other verimn. After the house is cleaned and disinfected whitewash is an important aid in helping to keep the house in in a sanitary condition.

If the house is not particularly bad a small mount of disinfectnt can be added to the whitewash and the two jobs one at the same time. If sick chickens have been in the houses it is best to disinfect first and add disinfectant to the whitewash in order to make a thorough job. An effective whitewash for this purpose is made as follows:

Slake a half peck of lime and dissolve it with 20 gallons of water. Add one pound of salt previously dissolved in water. To this mixture add two quarts of crude carbolic acid. This mixture may be applied with a spray or brush. If the mixture is properly put on it not only kills the mites but destroys the eggs and will make the house fresh and clean.

FIRST WEEK IN APRIL IS RAT EXTERMINATION WEEK

The first week of April has been set aside as rat extermination week in Iowa. As usual prizes will be given for the largest slaughter, and the various county agents will organize for the contest. The Chief of the Bureau of the Biological Survey says "House rats are of more universal concern to the people of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific than any other wild animal pest They have long been recognized by experienced observers of animals in the world as one of the most dangerous species of animal in the world and one of the most destructive." One reason why rats are on the increase is because of the cruel slaughter of their worst enemies, hawks, owls, skunks, bull snakes and weasels. None of these are anyways near as destructive to chickens as rats, and yet fellows with the gun habit will shoot these on sight, but give little heed to the destruction of rats.

CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

A marked increase in attendance over former Sundays was notable last Sabbath. Nearly every available seat was cammandeered. We shall look for many more next Sundy and shall provide for all. We wish to help you, and this is one way of doing so, if you will let us. The Lord's cause is the greatest thing in Klemme today and the churches should have the undivided support of all people.

We are working up to Easter and are hoping and praying to make that a day never to be forgotten. We will nnounce definately later.

"Christ the all sufficient Savior" will be our next Sunday's theme in the Pre-Easter series of "What think ye of Christ."

Miss O'niel led in a very interesting study in the Epworth League last Sunday. Come out for a similiar hour next Sunday at 6:45

"Continuing writing the Book of Acts in our Day" is our subject Sunday evening. Unless thec hurch lost its vision, it ever has and ever is writing a book of acts as truly as thatrecorded in the bible.

DANGER IN EARLY PASTURES

Dairymen Should Not Expect Cows to Live on Grass Alone

Turning cows out on the pastures too soon in the spring is one of the common mistakes producers make according to dairy specialists, Iowa Stte College, and this year the tendency will be greater than before, be cause of the general shortage of feed.

To turn the cows out in the pastures too early, hurts the pastures, and the feed value of the pastures is especially low so that it hurts the cows, early grass consisting mostly of water. Wait until the grass gets a good start and take the cows off winaer feed gradually, advise the extension men. Six to eight weeks after the cows have been on pasture the medium producers will do fairly well on grass alone. With high producers, however, the grain allowance should be continued, but may be cut down a few pounds.

"Yet's swim out to the bar,' suggested Ethel.

"I'd like to, but I doubt if I could swim three miles even for a drink,' sighed Guzzler.

STRAWBERRIES ARE NOT FUSSY

Will Grow on Many Kinds of Soils, Says Small Fruits Specialist

Strawberres will grow on more different kinds of soils than almost any other cultivated crop, according to C. V Holsinger, small fruits specialist, extension service, Ames. Any Iowa soil which will grow at least 60 bushels of corn will grow at least 100 bushels of strawberries per acre. An important point in growing berries is not to over-fertilize.

Plants should be placed in the ground as soon as weather and soil conditions will permit and while the plants are in a dormant state. Plants may be put 15 to 20 inches apart in rows four feet apart. The ground should be well worked and fine on top, but firm underneath to afford solid rooting for the plants.

For home garden purposes, the Dunlap is by far the most desirable variety. It yields a large deep berry with practically no core and is smooth in texture and excellent in taste. Gibson and Big Lake are other good varieties. Everbearing varieties do well in northern part of the state and in cool moist seasons in southern Iowa.

BIG SAVING WILL BE MADE ON AUTO PLATES FOR IOWA NEXT YEAR

Des Moines, March 25—The executive council approved the bid of the state board of control for the manufacture of automobile license plates at the men's reformatory at Anamosa under the "state use" plan of convict labor.

The approved bid is 5.9 cents per plate and 1,400,000 plates or 700,000 pairs are necessary to supply Iowa car owners, according to Walter Ramsey, secretary of state. The price paid for 1925 plates was 13 cents the pair.

The board of control now has an investment of $100,000 in the auto plate plant, which will give employment to 20 men.

According to A. M. McColl, a member of the board, an effort is being made to effect a plan of reciprocity with neighboring states where convict labor is employed under a "state use" law. If this should be successful, the board expects to be able to increase the Anamosa output of auto mobile plates.

The Slemmons bill before the senate to adopt a five-year plate with inserts designating the year, would if enacted, make a radical change in the industry at Anamosa.

HOW MUCH DOES IT COST?

No doubt many do not go to college for special training because they think it would be too expensive Students who live in Iowa need not spend more than $200 for a term's work (three months) at Iowa State College and many get through with less than that. Barl is about $6 a week for men and $5 a week for women. Rooms cost $2.50 to $3 a week for men and $7 to $15 a month for women.

LOOK UP; SMILE!

A young man once found a dollar bill on the street. From that time on he never lifted his eyes from the ground when walking. In the course of forty years he accumulated 29,516 buttons, 54,172 pins, 7 pennies a bent back and a miserly disposition He lost the glories of the sun light the smiles of friends, the songs of birds, the beauties of flowers, trees blue skies, and the opportunity to serve his fellow men and spread happiness—all for a tattered dollar bill. IOWA'S SEED CORN NEEDS TEST

Either Rag Doll or Modified Rag Doll Methods Will Give Good Results

Altho a high percent of germination was found in the tests of hundreds of samples of seed corn sent from all parts of the state to the farm crops seed labratory at Iowa State College, that fact is not to be taken as meaning that Iowa seed does not need to be tested carefully. Most lots of seed corn must be given the individual ear test if the farmer is to be certain that his planting will not include seed from ears which are dead, moldy or weak. To test is best.

Probably the simplest and best known tester is the rag doll, which consists of a strip of bleached muslin 10 inches wide and 60 inches long. This is marked off lengthwise down the center and crosswise at four inch intervals, leaving ten inches unmarked at each end. This is moistened and laid flat on a board and is ready to receive the kernels. At least six kernels should be taken from different parts of each ear. These are laid in squares which are numbered to correspond with the ears. When the kernels from 20 ears, which a single doll will accommodate, have been placed on a cloth the doll is rolled as loose as possible and fastened with rubber bands around the center. A label is then inserted under the band and the doll placed in a bucket of water for two or three hours. At the end of that time the water is poured off and the bucket covered with several layers of newspaper. The bucket is then nverted and placed in a room at a temperature of 70 or 85 degrees Fahrenheit. If the dolls are stood up on end in the pail the test can be ead more easily. It may be beneficial to water again at the end of three or four days. Germination can be read in from six to eight days, depending upon the temperature of the room.

The modified rag doll test, is recommended where a number of diseased ears are suspected. That consists in laying a strip of medium heavy wrapping paper under the moist cloth and placing the kernels from each row in rows across the dolls instead of grouping them in squares as in the ordinary rag doll. The rows are laid one and one half inch apart and the kernels an inch apart in the row, with the tips all pointing to one side of the doll. The purpose of arranging kernels in this way and the use of paper is to prevent molds from spreading from the kernel of one ear to those of other ears.

MODERN ADVERTISING

In the recent issue of Liberty, Bruce Barton tells an interesting story of modern advertising, $16,000, he says, is the cost of the back cover of a well known woman's magazine. A page in the color rotogravure section of a Chicago newspaper costs the advertiser $4,500. Ford's advertising annually costs him $7,000,000, while Wrigley gets along with a $4,000,000 appropriation.

Advertising does build business, says Barton, but it can't preform miracles. It does build up volume, and volume reduces cost. The public consciousness must always be kept alive to the merits and valuo of the products you are seling. Rubifoam and Pearline became household words through advertising. Profits were enormous. Then new regimes succeeded to the management of those businesses and were shocked at the annual outlay for advertising. The products were famous. Why continue to tell the world what it already knew? They stopped advertising Rubifoam and Pearline are no longer household words. They represent business failures of yesterday.

Every year advertising raises business standards higher, creates new habits, stimulate more business and plays a more important role in the intelligent marketing of the world's merchandise.

Thetrouble with prohibition enforcement seems to be that the juries are no better than the people.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

FIRST TO RAISE ENDOWMENT QUOTA

To Kentucky department of the American Legion goes the honor of being the first state to name the chairman of its state committee to carry on the American Legion endowment fund movement. To that department also goes the honor of having the first post (Sterns post, Sterns, Ky.) to raise its quota in this movement.

No small part of the credit for these achievements belongs to Frank Dillman Rash of Earlington, the department commander. Mr. Rash brought to the tasks of the commandership a long experience in business, in National Guard and army problems, in fraternal circles and in public affairs.

Born at St. Charles, Ky., on September 1, 1878, Mr. Rash received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from South Kentucky college in 1987. He then spent four years in the study of mining engineering and metallurgy at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, graduating with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1910.

In that year he became assistant engineer with the St. Bernard Mining company of Earlington, advancing through various positions to the presidency and general managership in 1920. He is now vice president of the West Kentucky Coal company, in charge of the Earlington division, which now controls the properties of the St. Bernard company. He has been very active in mining circles and has contributed a number of technical articles on this and allied subjects.

Passing through various grades in the Kentucky National Guard, he was major and brigade adjutant of the First Kentucky brigade of infantry on the Mexican border. He was called into service in the inspector general's division of the United States army in July, 1918, and assigned to duty in the War department. He was discharged in December following and now holds the rank of lieutenant colonel in the reserves.

A charter member of Joseph Vernon Lloyd post No. 2 of the American Legion at Earlington, the new commander was post chaplain in 1923 and 1924. He was elected department vice commander in 1923 and commander in 1924. At various times in the past 20 years he has held the position of councilman and mayor of Earlington. He is married and has one son.

Recent World Conflict as Help or Hindrance

Whether the "most colossal war of history shall be a benefit or a detriment to the world depends upon how we, who were left in the world, normal and little affected, shall use our opportunities," declared James A. Drain, national commander of the American Legion, in a recent radio message broadcast to veterans throughout the country from Indianapolis.

"If the World war is to prove a greater help than a hindrance to mankind," he said, "those of us left behind, whom the war has not so deeply scarred, are the instruments under God to make it so."

Legion Most Valuable

"The Iowa Legionnaire" says a man of its acquaintance belongs to twenty-four different organizations, including the Legion, and that the Legion costs him less and is more valuable to him than any of the others. The world's champion "joiner" produced credentials to show that his fraternal spirt was actually expansive enough to embrace two dozen affiliations.

Too Honest

Six-year-old Billie found a pocketbook and made haste to return it to its owner.

"You're an honest lad," the latter told him, magnanimously. "Here, I'll give you a dime."

"Aw, you don't hafta," replied Billie, turning away. "I kept a quarter out."—American Legion Weekly.

FROCK OF STRIPED TUB SILK; TWO-PIECE JUMPER FROCKS

MAYBE the artist who designed the new striped tub silks received inspiration from the gay colored candy canes strung across the confectioner's window at holiday time, or maybe the barber's pole with its many stripes had something to do with it or possibly beach tents and awnings gave the suggestion. At any rate, the new wash silks for spring and summer are beautifully striped. These happy looking striped silks are just about the prettiest material one can choose for little girl's frocks.

The fact that these silks launder so perfectly makes them especially desirable for children's apparel. Then, too, stripes always can be manipulated so effectively in the designing of a garment. They are a trimming of themselves. The picture shows a dress which most any little girl will beg mother dear to copy for her, that is, unless she prefers to go to the store and buy it ready-made. There is such a comfortable fullness at the front of the skirt secured through inverted plaits and those pockets! The horizontal stripes across keep it a secret that they are pockets, but they are! The idea of laying the material in plaits from neck to skirt hem is a popular one with dressmakers and designers this season.

Another tub fabric which is creating a very favorable impression for children's frocks is quaint English print. The advantage of this material is that it is new in the realm of childhood's fashions. Then, too, it comes in such delightful colors which bespeak springtime loveliness, in tones of lavender, yellow and rose. As to laundering, it does up to perfection.

Plaid ginghams and plaid silks are among chosen mediums. Gingham suspender frocks, or skirts as they really are, are worn over white voile blouses, made peasant style with full sleeves. The smocking or cross-stitch repeats the gay colors of the plaid.

Like smiles and good humor, fashion, style or the vogue, as one may be pleased to term it, is contagious. Just now it is the idea of the two-piece dress, jumper-frock as it is called, which is spreading like an epidemic throughout the realm of fashion. The popularity of these smart separate skirt and blouse frocks was foretold where all spring fashions have their tryout—Florida and California winter resort style centers.

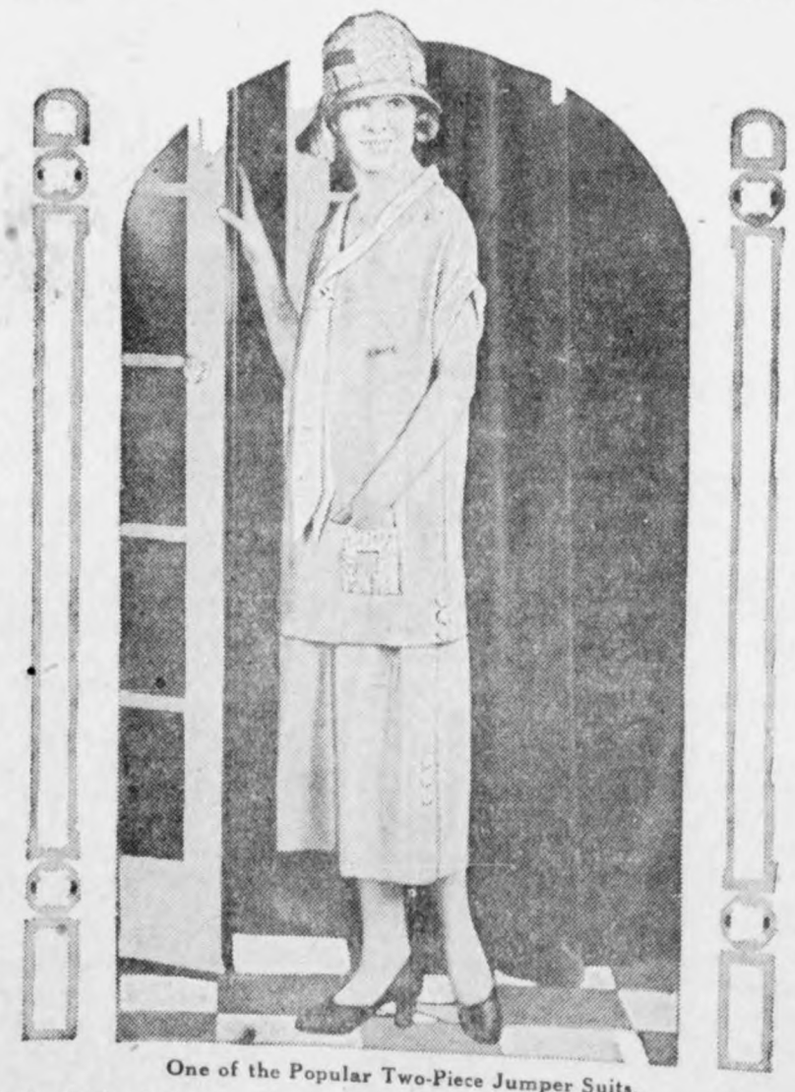
Undoubtedly all indications are toward a record season of separate skirts and blouses. Nor are these two-piece frocks limited to sportswear, for smart dressed women are favoring these ultra-tailored costumes for luncheon and informal daytime wear.

Every Little Girl Will Want One.

The chief characteristic of these fashionable jumper suits is their extreme simplicity. The material selected for the most exclusive sort is apt to be a flat crepe of superior quality, a heavy canton crepe or a dull finished wash satin. The majority of them have long flowing ties, just as you see in the model here pictured. The skirt is usually a wrap-around. There may be a bit of embroidery on the pocket and a touch at the neck. Not always is this so, for severe trims, bone buttons, and stitched bands are noted on many of the most exclusive types.

The sleeveless jumper with skirt to match is destined to be one of the most important styles of the coming months. Worn with a colorfully embroidered or smocked white voile blouse the effect is stunning.

The ensemble idea is effectively developed in these jumper suits, for there is such excellent opportunity to use two materials. For example, a printed silk blouse posed over a white crepe plaited skirt has a border around the hemline matching the material of the jumper. Further relation is established between the two, in that the white crepe of the skirt bands the short sleeves and fashions the wide-end man's tie—for, as said before, these long ties of the same material as the frock are almost an inevitable detail throughout all costuming.



One of the Popular Two-Piece Jumper Suits.

Lick Home Town First, Good Advice to Boys

In a discussion entitled "How Can I Help My Boy Get Started," Bruce Barton gives sane counsel to the youth who thinks he can do better in New York city than in his own town. In his article in Good Housekeeping, the writer tells for the benefit of young men his experience with a lad he met in another city who felt himself called to the metropolis.

"It must be great to live in New York and meet so many interesting people," the boy said to him "Do you think I ought to go to New York?"

"No," I answered.

His face fell. "Why not?"

"Because New York is full of chaps like you who have never done anything, and for the most part they lead very lonesome lives. You don't suppose these so-called 'interesting' people would have any interest in you, do you? Interesting people like interesting people. Success has no time for failures."

It was a shot between the eyes. He was silent for a full minute. His jaw set; it looked more than ever like his father's jaw.

"But I hate this town," he cried. "What's the use of staying in a place you hate? Why can't I start in New York?"

"Because it's a mistake to leave any town until you have licked it," I answered. "A man's life ought to be like the march of an army; he should conquer the territory as he travels, leaving no hostile forces in his rear.

"New York is the biggest thing in the country," I went on. "It's the champion, the Jack Dempsey, the Babe Ruth of all the towns. You can't step out and fight Dempsey right off. You've got to get a reputation; you've got to lick a lot of little fellows first. The place for you to start is here, in a town you don't like."

National Demand for Better Building Seen

There are a number of interesting statements in the semiannual statement of the American Construction council, issued through its president, Franklin D. Roosevelt, recently. The statement was formulated at the meeting of the council held in New York city. Especially significant are the passages from the statement which follow:

"The increasing demand for better building, a movement which the council sponsored on a national scale last spring, is accompanied by a general undertone of increasing confidence as to the greater stability in the construction industry throughout the country as a whole.

"The amount of new work contracted for and begun has held up unusually well. This shows a very favorable response on the part of the public to the general movement.

"Even a more significant fact stands out as to the present type of building operations. There is a larger ratio of commercial and industrial structures contracted for than there has been for some time."

Ground Beautifying

Hardy plantings give permanent effects, and will grow more beautiful each season. Some bedding plants and annuals may be used also with effect, but where we are planting our own grounds for our home for an indefinite period we can get far better results if we use mostly hardy trees, shrubs and plants for our general planting. We need not plant all at once, but we can plan for the whole and work to our plan as we may. It takes years to obtain the full effect of some kinds of plants and these should be planted first, but we can use temporary plantings to help out in the meantime. There are a good many fine plants that can be made very effective on short notice, and even a good showing may be made with annuals from seeds in one summer. These quick effects are especially valuable for those occupying their homes but temporarily.—Successful Farming.

Planting of Pecans Urged

A suggestion for the beautification of country roads and advertisement of this section by planting pecan trees along the highways was received at the office of the board of revenue from W. C. Strong of Theodore. The letter explains that the trees would serve for ornamentation and shade and would be revenue producing in a few years. It was pointed out that the plan is being adopted in other sections of the country.

The suggestion was read to the board and filed.—Mobile Register.

WNU Service.

The secretary dressed for dinner that night with his mind on several new problems, the first of which was the problem of the black leather case. Looked at from every possible angle, he could not wholly solve it, though he was rapidly evolving a working theory. If he were to have any peace and comfort this year, if he were to get back his nervous strength and recover for himself the man he had been, he must do certain things, and do them quickly. Among them, he must once and for all do away with the melodramatic mysteries of Tawno Ker. He must find out what there was in the house that crept along halls and climbed up to transoms and stole and duplicated leather cases and then returned them. After that, perhaps, he would have some comfort—a condition he could not hope for now. This very night, for example, he was probably in for some infernal manifestation that would deprive him of the sleep he so urgently needed.

However, he was, in a way, prepared for these. He had two pistols now, and the other articles he had bought. The pistols were loaded and ready. In one way the fact was reassuring. In another it disturbed him. He did not wish to do any impulsive shooting and subsequently and bitterly regret it. He began to feel that he had made a mistake in buying the pistols. He considered hiding them in his trunk. He ended by hiding one there and slipping the other into a pocket of his evening trousers. It was a very small, unobtrusive pistol. He had been careful to select that kind. And undoubtedly it would be safer in his hands than in the dark and sinister hand he had seen through his transom window the night before.

Dinner that night was again almost gay. Madame Hvoeslef was her most engaging self. Evidently, with the transference of the black leather case to the Trust company's vaults a great weight had rolled off her mind. Verity and David Campbell responded to her mood. Soft ripples of laughter swept the table, laughter in which Renshaw did not join but which he subconsciously enjoyed.

It was rather wonderful to hear Verity Campbell laugh, and he had not realized that her beautiful but rather cold face could be so warmed and illumined as he saw it now. Her laugh was delicious—soft, low, and full of mirth. He listened to Mrs. Pardee but looking at Verity, and as he looked his dislike of her and his inner masculine resentment of her cool self-sufficiency gave place to his first impulse of genuine admiration. Something like admiration had stirred in him when he watched her play with We-wee. He began to realize that the beautiful Miss Campbell had two sides. That was disturbing. With the discovery of an attractive side, he could not lend himself to the wholehearted disapproval of her which he had expected and desired to feel.

Her singing after dinner strengthened this conviction. It, too, reflected her new mood. The Slavic songs to which heretofore she and Madame Hvoeslef had largely confined themselves made way tonight for French and Spanish numbers, in which the predominating theme of love was wedded to that of joy.

Listening in his corner, Renshaw felt his lip curl a trifle. Much that girl knew about love! The foreigner knew. There was a woman who had loved and lived and died a few times and been born again, always with a heart attuned to life and the master hand. She must have had many lovers. She was the type whose inner fires were fierce and consuming—and soon exhausted, and readily replenished. He wondered what she and Miss Campbell talked about when they were alone. Certainly not about love! The foreigner was too sophisticated to permit Verity Campbell's clear eyes to rest on any untidy pages in her book of life.

He recalled his vagabond thoughts with a suddenness that brought him upright in his chair. Without analyzing his reasons, he felt that speculation as to the possible lovers of the foreigner was, in a way, pardonable. Certainly he had indulged in it without the sense of recoil he now felt. The recoil merged into a grim amusement at his own expense. He was making progress, he was getting back in touch with life, when he found himself speculating about women! He resolutely centered his thoughts on the black leather case.

He went up to his room at eleven o'clock. Before he opened the door he stood for a moment in front of it, silently studying the lock. It was a good lock, but an ordinary one. A trifle he had bought in town would effectually prevent it from being locked from the outside. He entered his room and inserted this trifle into the keyhole, nodding with satisfaction as he did so. No one outside could lock his door tonight. On the other hand, neither could he himself lock it. He drew forward a chair, inserted its back under the door-knob, and so placed it that a certain effort would be required to push the door open. He could not be taken wholly by surprise. After these simple preparations, he read and smoked for a time. Then, with a sense of expectation mingled with other emotions, in which excitement, resentment, anxiety and nervousness predominated in turn, he undressed, got into bed and turned out the lights, putting one of the new revolvers under his pillow, but within immediate reach, as the final precaution for an interesting vigil.

He waited with taut nerves. It was almost midnight, time for the nocturnal activities of the Thing to begin. As soon as he heard the sounds announcing the Thing's near approach, he would fling open the door and spring out upon whatever was there. After that—well, after that he would at least know what he was up against.

The clock on his mantel struck twelve. He was almost convinced that nothing would happen. Possibly the Thing did not roam about every night. Possibly it would never roam about again. Probably it had been shut up, confined—

He closed his eyes, and swiftly opened them again. Something had touched them, passed them, and was focused on the wall. It was the blue circle—and this time he studied it closely. It was a circle about the size of a silver dime. Its blue color was a singularly vivid hue. It danced and quivered on the wall beside him, so close to him that he could put up his hand and touch it. As he did so, it vanished and the familiar darkness of the room closed around him.

He lay still and for the first time seriously tried to explain the circle to himself. It was, of course, as he had held from the first, a reflection from somewhere, from something. That wise conclusion was still obvious. But from what?

The visiting light appeared again. It was as feverishly active now as it had been motionless on its previous visits. It touched his face, flitted about, and came to rest on the footboard of his bed. It touched his hand, and flew to the opposite wall. It played about his lips and leaped to the door leading to the hall, where it glowed silently on a panel.

Renshaw watched it with a gaze that shifted when it did. If he closed his eyes, it lingered on the lids till he reopened them. Its character changed. It had been interesting at first. It became annoying, like the repeated attacks of one mosquito on a hot night. It became more than annoying. It became first infuriating and at last simply devilish.

He rose and, going in turn to the room's four windows, stared out at each. With his movement the light disappeared. He could see nothing outside but the storm and the tortured, wind-flung branches of oaks and maples. He went to his door, opened it and glanced down the dark corridor. No sound or movement there rewarded him. He closed the door, replaced the chair-back under the knob, and returned to his bed. As soon as he was comfortably settled, the blue ball entered, touched his face, and danced for a moment on the wall. Then suddenly it grew quiet and remained fixed in one spot, like a watchful and infernal blue eye.

The clock struck two, the deep-toned strokes sounding ominous in the darkness. Two o'clock! And he had been on the edge of his nerves since eleven! That sort of thing would not do—it simply could not be endured. Tomorrow he would tell Campbell that he, Renshaw, must go away, that he was not up to the work. But no, that would not do, either. He had already shown that he was up to the work. Campbell had referred at dinner to a lot of things to be done the next day. Well, then, he could say he was not in as good condition as he had imagined.

A sudden memory seared his consciousness. He could not resign! He had no situation to resign—simply because he had refused a situation. He was not his own master. He was, for a year, David Campbell's property, bought and, in part, actually paid for. On the morning of the day that had only just ended, Campbell had given him a generous advance on the purchase price; and the greater part of that advance he, Renshaw, had already spent in town. Even assuming that he was willing to break the agreement he and Campbell had entered into, he must work a month to pay off the obligation imposed by that advance. In other words, he was a fixture here. He could not leave.

His eyes had closed and he had almost lost consciousness when he heard a noise in the hall. It was not the familiar thump, nor was it the equally abhorrent sound of crawling. It was the sound of footsteps—light and running. There was also the sound of hurried, excited breathing and of a rap on his door. He sprang out of bed and hastened to open it, disturbed yet reassured by the rap. It was alarmed, but it was normal. He threw open the door and stared incredulously. Verity Campbell stood before him in the darkness. He could not see her, but he knew her even before she spoke to him in a voice hushed and terrified.

"Oh, Mr. Renshaw," she gasped, "please come with me quickly! I can't find either Jenks or James—and something dreadful has happened to grandfather!"

Renshaw nodded and stepped back into his room.

"One moment," he said, "and I will be with you."

He thrust his feet into slippers and pulled a dressing gown over his pajamas, knotting the cords of the robe as he rejoined her. He had to run to catch up with her. Having summoned him, she was almost at the end of the corridor when she felt him beside her. As they hurried past the central hall landing and into the west wing of the house, he asked a low-toned question or two. She replied in a voice that trembled.

"Madame Hvoeslef is with him," she said. "I called her first, when I could not get the servants. I can't imagine what has happened to Jenks. He is so reliable and faithful. But Aunt Katharine says they take a car and go into town sometimes at night, and perhaps she is right, though I never thought so."

"What's the matter with your grandfather?"

Renshaw's long, swinging stride was easily keeping pace now with her shorter steps.

"I don't know. I heard a fall. His bedroom is next to mine, you know. I thought I heard a groan. I ran out in the hall to his door and knocked. When there was no answer, I went in. He was lying in his bedroom, on the floor."

"Hurt? Unconscious?"

"I don't know. I ran for help—for Jenks first, then, when I couldn't find him, for Madame Hvoeslef. Auntie is of no use, of course, in a crisis, so we didn't even wake her."

She stopped as they reached what was evidently the door of the old man's bedroom, and passed through in silence, leaving the door open for Renshaw to follow her.

His first impulse was one of shock at the seeming lifelessness of the prone figure on the floor, over which Madame Hvoeslef was distractedly keeping guard. Her dark face lighted up with relief as the young man joined her.

"I have not ventured to do anything," she explained in a quick whisper. "He breathes; but I did not know if it would be wise to lift his head—"

Renshaw knelt beside his master, and his heart lightened. He had been afraid of violence, even of tragedy. Anything, he now believed, might happen in Tawno Ker. But seemingly what had happened was common enough. The old man had felt ill, had risen, had perhaps tried to call for help, and had fallen unconscious.

"What is it?"

Verity asked the question in a whisper. The young man went on with his hurried examination.

"A shock, I'm afraid."

"Is he—dying?"

"No—no, indeed. He's unconscious, but his heart is working well. The first thing to do is to make him comfortable."

He lifted the light figure in his arms as easily as if it had been the body of a child, and carrying it to the bed laid it between the sheets, drawing the bedclothing carefully up around it.

HOW TWO WOMEN AVOIDED OPERATIONS

The Following Letters of Mrs. Thurston and Mrs. Beard Carry an Encouraging Message to Other Sick Women

MRS. ETHEL THURSTON
324 N. PINE STREET, LIMA, OHIO

Lima, Ohio.—"I want to tell you how your medicine has helped me. For weeks I suffered with awful pains from inflammation and I was in such misery that I had to bend double to get relief. I could not be touched or jarred, had awful pain all over my abdomen and could not touch my feet to the floor. It was impossible for me to straighten up and the pains never ceased. I took treatments for some time and finally was told I would have to have an operation. I do not believe in operations, and I had read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I told my husband I would try it before I gave up. I soon began to feel that it was doing me good. The awful misery began to leave me, also the backache. I have a good appetite and am gaining in weight. Taking the medicine was the best thing I ever did. I feel like it has saved my life and I do not hesitate to say so to my friends. At least it saved me from a dreaded operation and I am still taking it. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about the medicine." —Mrs. ETHEL THURSTON, 324 North Pine Street, Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. Beard's Letter

Eddy, Texas.—"I will write you a few words, thinking it will do some one else good. Two doctors said I would have to be operated on because for nearly twelve months I suffered from a weakness from which I could get no relief. I was restless and nervous and was not able to walk across the house. They said it was the Change of Life. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers, and as I could not get any help from doctors I thought I would give that a trial. I began with the liquid and it helped me some, then you advised me to take the tablet form and I began to improve rapidly. I have gained in weight from 105 to 170 pounds. I recommend it to all women with this trouble."—Mrs. M. E. BEARD, R. No. 1, Box 143, Eddy, Texas.

THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION A LA CARTE

Order Any Amendment You Want

THEY are trying to pass an amendment to keep children from working. Now children didn't want to work, but they got tired waiting for somebody else to do it. If they would just put through an amendment to MAKE grown people all work, there would be no need to have this children one. Grown people stopped working without an Amendment or even a reason, so it will take more than an Amendment to start them. It will take a Miracle.

They are going to pass another Prohibition Amendment, somebody mislayed the rules of the other one. The 19th amendment made Women vote, some amendments make us do something and some keep us from it. No. 21 will make men with Knee Breeches the style. About the 25th Amendment will prohibit smoking and when they do, 'Bull' Durham will bootleg for a dollar a sack. THEN THEY CUSS THE PRINTER

It may be sad, but still 'tis true,
There's one thing all us humans do,
And that is, blame the printer.
He does his best, without your help,
For all we do is stand and yelp,
Then cuss and blame the printer.

We write our manuscript by pen
To read it is beyond our ken,
Yet we expect the printer
To dope it out and get it right.
Wethink not of his time or sight;
It wrong, we blame the printer.

We hold our stuff until the last,
Then try to push it through so fast
The printer gets snowed under.
But still we camp upon his trail,
And prod him on with woeful tale,
Or rant and roar like hunder.

He shoots it through, the proof we get,
Hell's bells, the job is not right yet.
We chop that proof to splinters.
It takes two days before he knows
Just what each heiroglyphic shows
A dumb lot are these printers.

The job's delivered some relief,
To know we're through the rush and grief,
We ought to thank the printer,
But, no! The poor gink's out of luck,
He overcharged us one whole buck.
Once more we damn the printer.

TORNADO KILLS 823, HURTS 2,990 WHEN IT HITS FIVE STATES

Illinois and Indiana Hardest Hit—Entire Towns Wiped Out—Relief Workers Aid Victims—State Troops on Guard to Prevent Looting.

Chicago.—Following the organization of relief in the tornado-stricken area of Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee, it was disclosed that about 823 persons had been killed and 2,990 injured. Several towns were completely obliterated and thousands were made homeless.

The Illinois total of deaths is 645, Indiana 100, Missouri 27, Kentucky 18 and Tennessee about 33.

Following the wind in many cities and towns, fire broke out. In some cases the relief work already had been organized so well that the conflagrations were under control in a short time. In others scores of maimed and dead were burned almost beyond recognition.

Illinois Suffers Most.

Murphysboro, West Frankfort and De Soto were the Illinois cities that suffered most from the terrific wind blast. Gorham also suffered heavily in dead and wounded. In Indiana, Griffin, Princeton and Owensville were hardest hit while in Missouri, Biehle suffered about ten deaths. Gallatin, Tenn., reported that about thirty had been killed there.

In a number of towns lighting systems were out of order and darkness hampered the workers at night. National Guard troops are protecting these places from possible looting. Pullman cars have arrived in many of the villages to provide sleeping places for the thousands of homeless while tent villages are arising rapidly.

In a few cities where there had been happiness, prosperity, and future, the tornado blasted all. In others it showed fiendish eccentricity by leveling and blackening portions, while sparing the rest.

Towns Swept Away.

Nearly half of Princeton, Ind., was smitten. A sister city, Griffin, was virtually carried away. De Soto, Ill., with 500 people, lost its existence. A neighbor, Gorham, of 300 souls, was wiped out. Murphysboro, Ill., lost nearly three square miles of its business and residential sections. Other hamlets are yet cut off from telling their story.

Property Losses in Millions.

Those in charge speak in millions when asked to estimate material losses. The brief dispatches read: "$100,000 in southwestern Kentucky," "$2,000,000 at Princeton," "$6,000,000 in southern Illinois," "$100,000 in Missouri." At the other scenes no one yet ventures to estimate.

The tornado took its toll over a territory of 300 miles in five hours and within the same period of time outside aid was covering that distance to carry help and comfort to survivors. The Red Cross rushed supplies from St. Louis. Chicago offered $500,000. The Illinois legislature appropriated a like amount and the Missouri legislature $25,000.

Toll of Dead Mounting.

In southern Illinois, where terrific havoc was wrought in four towns, Murphysboro, West Franfort, De Soto and Gorham, all in coal mining territory within a twenty-five mile radius of Carbondale, the relief center, the toll of dead and injured continued to mount as additional bodies were taken from the ruins. The death list was above the 500 mark, while between 2,000 and 3,000 were injured and thousands were homeless. Relief workers said the loss of life might reach 1,000. The property damage in the area was estimated at $7,000,000.

Grim Story in Morgue.

It was at the morgue of southern Illinois' largest city where the story of West Frankfort's tragedy was briefly but grimly told. Ninety-one bodies lay stretched in long rows, and the first twenty-one were the forms of little children, ranging from eighteen months to four years in age.

They lay in a pitiful row on a long table, faces uncovered so some heartbroken mother or father or perhaps an older brother or sister might claim them. One by one the little bodies were tagged with a family name as identifications were made.

At a mine known as No. 18 twelve men went to their deaths when the plant above ground was demolished.

Terrible was the destruction vented on Murphysboro.

Makes Kindling Wood of Homes.

More than half of it now is little more than kindling wood and smoldering ruins of hundreds of homes.

Hours of battering by field artillery could do no more to a town than the tornado did to the stricken area of Murphysboro. Brick buildings went with the weaker frames. Thirty-seven children were crushed to death in the collapse of two school buildings. Two square miles which contained 500 residences and 100 business houses were leveled.

One of the buildings destroyed was a new $85,000 Baptist church, where a funeral was being held when the tornado struck. Another was a new $267,000 addition to the high school.

Chief of Police Joe Boston found the body of his daughter in these ruins. The dry grass on some of the lawns was actually uprooted.

Soldiers Fire at Looters.

Looting began early at West Frankfort and guards fired several shots in the darkness at prowlers in the ruins, but none were wounded or captured.

West Frankfort is without water, except that hauled in.

Thirteen persons are said to have burned to death when they fled to the basement of a Murphysboro restaurant. A woman and her small twins were found side by side, dead, in a field near De Soto.

There the disaster fell largely on persons of limited means, some out of work because of the shut down of coal fields. Many women and children and a score of babies appeared on the death lists. Entire families were wiped out. One man, searching through a morgue for his wife and three children, found the bodies of his babes side by side in one room, his wife in another.

Identify Dead by Jewelry.

Many of the bodies were mangled, scarred or burned, some beyond recognition. Identification in many instances had to be made by rings or other personal belongings.

The government, Red Cross, state troops, private institutions and individuals combined in the huge task of caring for the injured, giving shelter and hunting bodies.

In Murphysboro, where 147 bodies have been recovered, 8,000 persons, or two-thirds of the population, were homeless. One hundred city blocks were demolished there and the power plant wrecked. Seventeen students were killed in the destruction of school buildings.

Woman Blown into Treetop.

Forty-five bodies had been recovered at De Soto, which virtually was obliterated. More than a dozen other Illinois towns reported from one to forty deaths. At De Soto a woman with a baby in her arms was blown to the top of a tree, where she clung until the storm passed, and then descended virtually without injury.

Soldiers Patrol Wreckage.

Soldiers are everywhere on duty in the area of suffering and citizens have organized themselves and are digging in the ruins of their homes. Some who probe the wreckage are seeking to retrieve a little part of what were once their belongings.

Witnesses said the towns in the storm's path were wrecked in a few minutes. One described the deadly visitor as a greenish black funnel, slanting at an angle of 45 degrees. A deluge of hail followed in its path.

A committee from the Illinois state legislature visited the stricken area with Gov. Len Small.

Relief Work in Indiana.

In Indiana relief measures also were going forward rapidly under the direction of Gov. Ed. Jackson. Of five towns struck in that state, Griffin, a Posey county village, suffered most. With 47 bodies recovered, it was believed that the death list might mount to 125. Griffin virtually was wiped out, and systematic work at rescue was held up for a time because few were left uninjured in the village. Military lines have been drawn about the entire area.

At Princeton, which counted 20 dead, the 2,000,000 shops of the Southern railway were destroyed, throwing 400 persons out of work. Most of the homes destroyed were those of workingmen.

It was announced from Washington that national headquarters of the Red Cross, with its chief, President Coolidge, taking the initiative, had set in motion its entire machinery of mercy to the injured and homeless.

From Chicago additional nurses and physicians, assembled by Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, departed for southern Illinois with medical equipment. Plans were made to raise $500,000 as Chicago's relief quota.

Sees Children Die in School.

Centralia, Ill.—A dramatic eye-witness story of the death of a score or more of children in the school at De Soto and of the virtual destruction of the town was told here by Max Burton.

Burton is telegraph operator for the Illinois Central at Tamaroa, a few miles from De Soto, and on receiving a flash of the destruction he motored there, being the first outsider to arrive, and found the town a mass of debris, with dead and injured strewn in the streets.

All Houses Destroyed.

"It seemed to me there was not an entire house in the town," Burton said. "People were hurrying out on the road, north and south, with a few belongings clutched in their arms, more for protection against the storm than anything else, so far as I could see.

"I went directly to the schoolhouse, after running and walking two and a half miles, and the first thing I saw there was the bodies of about twenty little children laid out on mattresses and blankets. There was no one there to claim them, so I thought the people whom I had seen on the road were their parents, but I learned later that the children's parents had been killed or injured, and those who were not dead were being hurried by automobile, special relief train and ambulances to hospitals in Carbondale and Duquoin.

"The principal of the school was there trying to identify the bodies of the pupils. He also was worrying over the safety of two girl teachers who were unaccounted for. The principal was bloody from his injuries and staggered in his walk. He had barely escaped with his life.

Carried Bodies From Ruins.

"About twenty-five bodies of school children were piled up just outside the playgrounds, and a search was being made for others in the ruins. While I stood there they took some of the bodies away and brought others out of the building, which by then was a mass of smoldering ruins, fire having destroyed what the cyclone did not.

Jack Dougherty, Philadelphia fight manager, was acquitted on all charges.

The penalty that can be imposed on the conspiracy charge is a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment in a federal penitentiary for two years or both. The penalty for illegal transportation of films is a fine of $1,000.

heart when he attempted to resist the robbers. He died instantly.

"The hallway of the school had caved in, and what few rescuers were on hand were trying to uncover other bodies of pupils and locate the two missing teachers.

"I walked out beyond the school grounds and near the city limits I saw the bodies of two babies, apparently about six or eight months old. They were dead and their baby clothes had been torn from them.

Sees People Fleeing Town.

"Every tree that was left standing and every fence had garments, bedclothes and household goods hurled against the west side of them. This indicated the storm traveled eastward. I saw furniture, automobile tops and clothing scattered everywhere, and saw many people fleeing from the town with hardly any garments.

"The business section was practically destroyed by fire and wind and nearly every home was flat on the ground.

"I saw about forty automobiles piled up in one big pile and thought this was a garage that had been struck.

"Then I saw another car just outside of town that looked like the people were trying to get away, but had failed. The car had blown from the road over to the railroad right of way and was wrecked, but I could find no bodies.

Firemen Aid in Rescue Work.

"I offered what help I could, and they told me the bodies were first taken south to Carbondale, but that the hospital there was soon filled and they then took the injured to the Duquoin hospital, north of De Soto.

"Automobiles were stretched along the hard roads north and south of De Soto for nearly three miles, a short time after the cyclone."

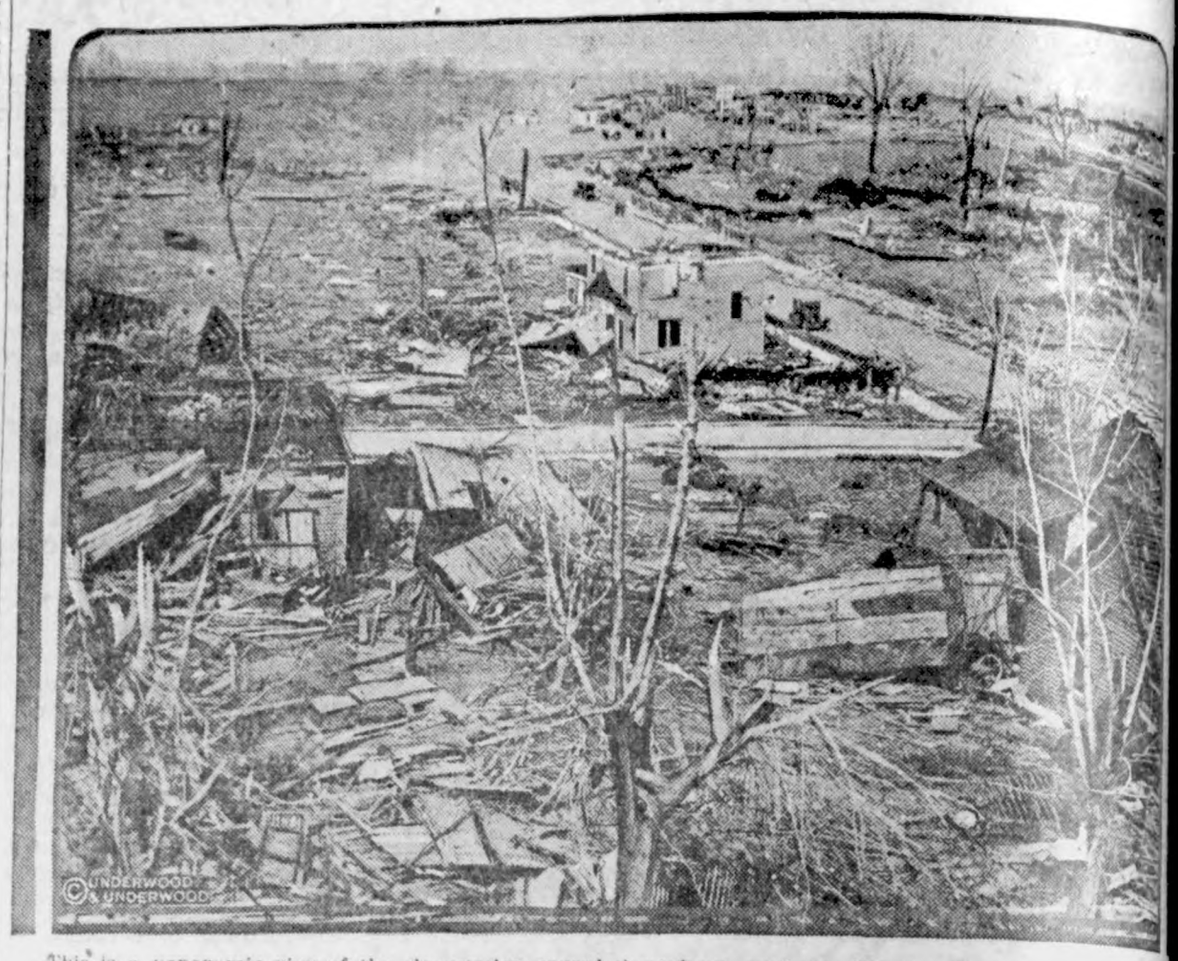
General View of Illinois Tornado



This is a panoramic view of the devastation caused throughout southern Illinois by the recent hurricane which hundreds of lives were lost, many hundreds of people seriously injured, and millions of dollars' worth of dam resulted.

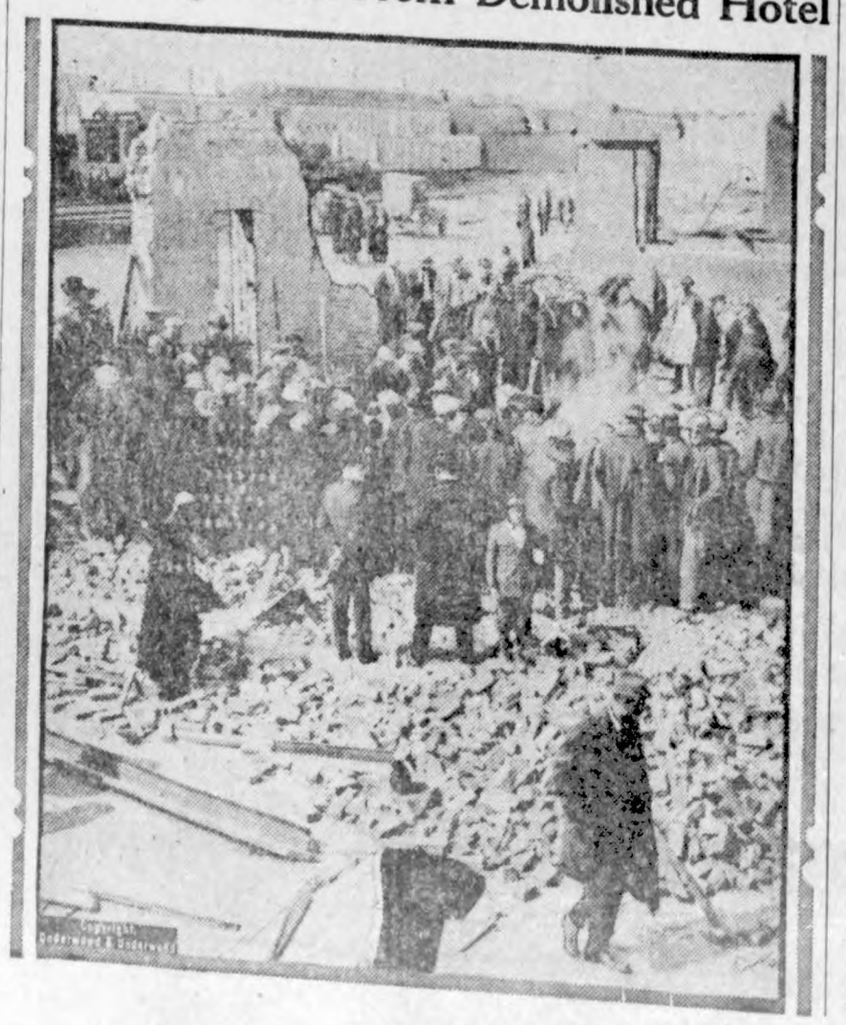
Removing Dead From Demolished Hotel



ONE OF THE SURVIVORS

Good Reason Why Wife Should Be Big Figure

Henry Savage Landor, painter, explorer and writer, tells this story in his reminiscences, "Everywhere: the Memoirs of an Explorer." Painting portraits in America, the author was commissioned to paint a typical self-made American business man and his wife, the picture to depict the deck of a yacht with the wife in the center.

He was a huge fellow, six feet three inches in height. She was a pretty little woman, hardly five feet high. Naturally, in the picture he appeared larger than she did. When he saw the painting he was horrified. What I had done was appalling and would not do at all.

"'Do you not know,' he shouted, shaking his fist at me, 'that my wife owns all the money? She owns the yacht, not I. There, in the painting, you have represented me larger than she!'

"'But you are larger, even if she be richer!' I retorted.

"'I don't care. You will have to rub us out and paint us in again as I direct you. I have ordered the picture and I want it painted as I like.'"

Possessing a keen sense of humor, the author did as requested, making the wife look a giantess, to the great satisfaction of her husband.

According to the Boone county board's plans for road improvement this season, $50,000 will be spent in leveling secondary roads.

The supply of wheat on Iowa farms is about 1,380,000 bushels, or 16 per cent of last season's harvest, compared with stocks of 3,014,000 a year ago.

Speaking of initiative and the general spread of scientific knowledge what's the matter with those northern Iowa thieves who chloroformed the hogs?

Zaid D. Lenoir, Negro graduate student of the University of Iowa, plans to use a $500,000 fund to build a welfare and education center and a hospital in Africa.

The amount of corn remaining on Iowa farms March 1, 1925, based upon percentages applied to the entire crop, was about 97,520,000 bushels, or 31 per cent of the 1924 crop.

The surest sign of spring is here—that of the wild ducks and geese winging their way northward. The lakes and ponds are literally alive with fowl, ducks predominating.

In order to reduce competition among Iowa farmers in corn and hogs there must be new factories and more industrial workers in Iowa to absorb other products from the land.

A number of former students in the herdsmen's course at Iowa State College, who have specialized in dairy work, have been employed as testers in the 60 cows testing associations of Iowa.

In keeping with its road program for 1925, the Grundy county board of supervisors has made application to the state highway commission for $30,000 from the primary road fund for the improvement of primary roads Nos. 14 and 57.

As soon as frost is out of the ground, gas lights will be taboo on all city streets and roadways in Des Moines. Electricity is fast becoming king of the night and at present the only gas lights in the city are on Ingman boulevard.

Ice in the Des Moines river went out gradually this year and without the usual jam that attends at the coming of thawing and spring weather. A large harvest of ice is reported by ice companies as a result of weeks of cold weather.

The next term for courses in agriculture, homemaking and the trades and industries—auto mechanics, mechanical engineering, electrical engineering, road making, drafting and structural engineering—begins March 4th. Any person 17 years of age or older who has completed the eighth grade or its equivalent may enroll at that time.

Building in Iowa is on the increase as it is shown in a survey made by the American Contractor. Des Moines and Cedar Rapids led the state in new buildings in February, the report shows. In Des Moines there were 136 permits issued for work valued at $1,089,460, as compared with 126 permits and $391,200 valuation in February, 1924.

The mental collapse of Ed Wickham, prominent contractor of Council Bluffs and his death by suicide, recalls one that it profits little if we gain much of this earth if it must be at the expense of our health, our mind and of our family. Wickham was the richest man in Council Bluffs in money. He leaves his money behind but has lost everything else.

No doubt many do not go to college for special training because they think it would be too expensive. Students who live in Iowa need not spend more than $200 for a term's work (three months) at Iowa State College and many get through on less. Board is about $6 a week for men and $5 for women. Rooms cost $2.50 and $3 a week for men and $7 to $15 a month for women.

Officials correspondents report 42 per cent of last year's crop of white potatoes of 10,744,000 bushels to be remaining as stocks on farms in Iowa on March 1, 1925, or about 4,512,000 bushels to be consumed or used for seed this season. The crop last season was about 3,940,000 bushels larger than the 1923 crop.

IOWA HOUSE KILLS INCOME TAX BILL

FRIENDS OF THE BILL MADE A SPIRITED FIGHT

The proposal for an Iowa state income tax is dead for two more years. The Iowa house of representatives by a vote of 36 to 72 killed the Patterson-Johnson income tax bill after a morning of hot debate and a session which was continued through the luncheon hour.

Few votes were ever in doubt throughout the debate as the failure of the measure was well understood before the argument opened.

This action by the house probably is conclusive. The only way in which the issue can be kept alive in the present session is by the filing of a motion to reconsider, which is not likely in view of the size of the vote against the bill.

Less oratory than usually is heard in an Iowa legislative chamber on such an important question, occurred prior to this vote. Only four house members spoke in favor of the bill and three against it.

FARMERS FOR SAFETY LAWS

A hundred farmers from five counties—Palo Alto, Pochahontas, Emmet, Kossuth and Hancock—have adopted resolutions indorsing: 1. A bank deposit guaranty law. 2. The proposed state income tax law. 3. A gasoline tax if made a property replacement tax. The conference also approved the proposed road bond issue. Members of the legislature were urged to act accordingly.

FREIGHT RATE BILL

Railroads with roundabout service between Iowa shipping points would be permitted to meet freight rates made by their direct line competitors under the terms of the Mathews bill which was passed by the Iowa house. This is the "long and short haul bill" which has been advocated before several sessions of the Iowa legislature but which heretofore has never been able to command a majority of both houses.

BUS TAX BILL OFFERED.

Substitution of a flat annual tax on motor busses and trucks used as common carriers and transfer of administration of the motor carrier law from the state railroad commission to the motor vehicle department of the secretary of state's office is recommended in the bill to rewrite the motor carrier law introduced in the Iowa senate today.

BILL PROPOSES MORE POWER

The power and authority of the board of railroad commissioners over motor carriers is increased and revised in a bill introduced in the house of the legislature by the committee on motor vehicles and transportation. The bill is said to have the approval not only of the railroad commission and state farm bureau but also the busmen operating in the state.

HIGHWAYS BILL LOOMS

The main road bill promises to revise Iowa's highway laws; to insure federal road aid; to place a portion of the primary road funds in the hands of the state highway commission to be used in developing the commission, and to repeal all special assessments for paving, now levied against benefitted property.

URGE STANDARDIZATION SCHOOL BOOKS

Representative Williams of Wayne county would have all public schools in the state use the same textbooks. A bill to that effect has been introduced in the house of the legislature, creating a state commission on standardization of textbooks.

CANNED HEAT BARRED IN IOWA

The senate passed, 46 to 0, the Romkey "canned heat" bill, which prohibits manufacture and sale of any compounded article that may be converted into a beverage without any chemical process or process of distillation.

BEAUTY BILL LOST.

The beauty parlor bill was defeated in the house of the Iowa legislature by a vote of 20 to 59.

Signatures are being placed on petitions circulated to give Shenandoah a city manager form of government.

Des Moines has prospects of securing the $1,000,000 Pharmaceutical Headquarters building to be erected by the drug interests of the country.

The 2,220 rural mail carriers of Iowa will receive an annual salary increase of $666,000 due to the postal pa yincrease just passed by congress. The money will be paid out through the Des Moines post office.

Three times as many calls for teachers came to the appointment committee of Iowa State College last year as there were applicants for positions and an even greater discrepancy between jobs and people to fill them is expected this year.

Remarking that some of the states are having difficulty about reading the bible in school the Burlington Hawkeye points out that "there's nothing to prevent them reading it at home."

Records of the Marshall-Grundy Cow Test Association for February were the best made by any association in Iowa. Thirty-six cows produced more than 40 pound of butter fat and twelve cows produced in excess of 50 pounds. The 248 cows of the association, averaged 712 pounds of milk and 29.5 pounds of butter fat, despite the short month.

PREMIER HITS CARDINALS' ACT

Riot in French Parliament as Deputies Approve of School Laws.

Paris.—The French government's policy for maintaining intact the separation of church and state and applying the secularization laws as passed by previous parliaments was endorsed by a vote of 327 to 95 in the chamber of deputies at a sitting filled with disorder.

The vote of confidence in Premier Herriot was taken after he had made a stubborn defense of his policy. During it he attacked the recent manifesto of the French cardinals and archbishops, which protested against the government's efforts to make the non-denominational school laws effective in Alsace, and compared the "Christianity of bankers" with the "Christianity of the catacombs."

The address of the premier opened the floodgates of temper of his opponents, which culminated in one of the worst disturbances the chamber ever has seen. Old and new orders in France came into dramatic conflict on the floor, first when the Catholics and the anti-clericals indulged in a free-for-all pummeling match, and, second, when a censured deputy, Marquis de la Ferronaye, refused to leave the chamber when he was ordered to do so and was finally expelled.

The premier's speech was interrupted at the outset by Abbe Lemire's admission that the manifesto of the cardinals had "troubled many consciences in profoundly Catholic communities." To that M. Herriot replied:

"We deeply respect all religious convictions. We will not allow any injury to their liberty, which we have to safeguard."

Then, turning to the opposition, the premier said:

"These gentlemen are grieved to hear me pronounce words of tolerance."

The manifesto of the cardinals, M. Herriot asserted, "was not the error of a moment or the work of one or two prelates; it was the conclusion of an entire campaign, and its application was one of an entire doctrine."

The premier said the French government must protest solemnly against the speech of Pope Pius delivered February 10 of the present year "reproaching the government for following an ungenerous and un-French policy."

Cincinnati Cops Indicted for Violating Dry Law

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Chief of Police William Copelan is reorganizing the Cincinnati police force as a result of the suspension from duty of forty-eight policemen and detectives following their indictment by a special federal grand jury on charges of violating the national prohibition law. Only one member of the night detective squad was not indicted.

United States District Attorney Haveth E. Mau filed a second indictment against Lieut. Aubrey Houston, two sergeants, three detectives, and six patrolmen. The indictment charges that they conspired to violate the federal prohibition act and the Harrison anti-narcotic law.

The arrival in Cincinnati of a group of federal prohibition officials caused speculation. They were headed by Roy A. Haynes, United States prohibition commissioner.

Assistant United States District Attorney A. Lee Beatty, in asking United States District Judge Benson W. Hough to set high bonds for the indicted men, told the court that the trials of the police would reveal startling conditions in Cincinnati.

2,000 Phones Wrecked by Storm in Lower Michigan

Detroit. — Demoralization of communications was the chief effect of the storm that touched lower Michigan, skirting the edges of the tornado. Hundreds of telephone poles were down, and wire communication was paralyzed in many parts of the lower peninsula. Two thousand telephones were put out of commission by the wind in Detroit.

There were no casualties so far as is known.

Train service was not affected, but street car service in Flint and Detroit was handicapped for hours.

Motor Racer Badly Hurt as Car Goes Into Fence

San Francisco. — Ralph Johnson, twenty-seven, of Philadelphia, a driver of racing automobiles, was injured seriously when a racing automobile in which he was practicing at Tanforan park left the track and plunged through a fence. Surgeons expressed the belief Johnson would die from his injuries.

Irish Redeem Bonds

London.—Irish Free State government bonds issued to finance the republican struggle are to be redeemed in 1927, it is learned here. The bonds amount to £3,000,000. Most of the amount was subscribed in the United States, it is said.

MARQUIS CURZON, STATESMAN, DEAD

Held Most Every High Office of British Empire.

London.—Marquis Curzon of Kedleston, lord president of the council, died here. He was sixty-six years old.

The marquis collapsed on March 5 at Cambridge, while dressing to attend a public dinner. It was said at the time that he had suffered from a hemorrhage.

When the necessity for an operation was announced his friends recognized that it would be serious for a man of his age. Nevertheless, Lord Curzon stood the ordeal better than had been expected.

The Marquis Curzon (George Nathaniel Curzon), from the cradle to the tomb, exemplified in every detail the type of superior personality known as the ruling aristocrat. He was bred for public life and followed the career of politics and government with such success that he held almost every great office under the crown except the highest of all—the post of prime minister.

Lord Curzon was born at Kedleston January 11, 1859, the eldest son of Rev. Alfred Nathaniel Holden Curzon, the fourth Baron Scarsdale. He married twice, taking an American as his wife on both occasions. In 1895 he married Miss Mary Victoria Leiter, daughter of L. Z. Leiter of Chicago. She died in 1906, the year after they returned from India, leaving three daughters. His second wife, whom he married in 1917, was Mrs. Grace Elvina Hinds Duggan, widow of Alfred Duggan of Buenos Aires.

His barony of Ravensdale, in the peerage of Ireland, passes to Lady Irene Curzon, a daughter by his first wife, who was Mary Leiter of Chicago.

$4,000,000 FIRE AT PALM BEACH

Five Missing After Breakers Hotel Is Destroyed—Martial Law Declared.

Palm Beach, Fla.—Fire destroyed the famous Breakers hotel, wiped out the smaller Palm Beach hotel, and for hours held a threat of destruction over the entire northern section of this celebrated winter playground of the wealthy.

Four cottages belonging to the Breakers were also burned, as were several private homes and shops near the razed structures.

The damage by fire along with the personal valuables lost by hundreds of wealthy guests is estimated at $4,000,000.

Martial law was put into effect by Governor Martin at the request of local authorities after police in West Palm Beach had captured two motor trucks and several automobiles loaded with valuables stolen from the ruins, arresting eight negroes and one white man.

Troops were immediately placed on guard at all bridges between the resort and West Palm Beach.

An elderly man and woman were reported burned to death in the Breakers, and two small children and their nurse were said to be missing from the same hotel. Parents of the children were searching frantically for them, but would not give their names.

A young girl was run over and killed in West Palm Beach by an automobile speeding to the fire.

For a time the Royal Poinciana, another famous hostelry, and the almost equally celebrated Bradley's club appeared certain to burn, and the guests were ordered to leave. The structures were saved, however, although a number of shops were destroyed.

Fire-fighting forces from Palm Beach, West Palm Beach, Lake Worth, Miami and several other towns fought the flames, and other firemen were on the way when the upper hand was gained by those on the scene about nine o'clock.

The fire started late in the afternoon in an upper floor of the south wing of the Breakers, which had nearly 900 rooms and provided accommodations for nearly 2,000 persons. The cause of the fire was variously reported as a carelessly handled cigaret, a plumber's torch and a woman guest using an electric appliance.

Flames broke through the roof and smoke almost immediately spread throughout the hotel. Guests hurriedly left the burning structure, many not waiting to save their personal belongings, and the loss of valuables of persons residing in the hotel is expected to be great. The hotel, constructed of highly inflammable pine wood, burned rapidly.

Thousands of spectators joined the firemen in their struggle and the crowd was so great an attempt to check the onrush of the flames with dynamite had to be abandoned.

The confusion and wildly flickering flames continued far into the night, and no reasonably accurate survey of the loss was possible. A few of the more fortunate guests and their servants had saved clothing and jewelry by tossing them hastily into pillow slips and sheets, but many were left only the articles they wore. Some bundles worth thousands of dollars were thrown to safety from windows, while the owners of other similar packages clung to them despite the added danger to themselves.

IF ALL the milk in the United States last year was put into one gigantic can a thousand feet in diameter, it would reach almost half a mile into the clouds, being more than four times the height of the Washington monument at the national capital, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The can would tower 2,009 feet in height, while the Washington monument is only 500 feet high.

Into the American milk can annually goes 11,925,252,441 gallons of white gold, valued at $2,566,000,000, the daily milkings of 24,675,000 cows. If the can was emptied, it would make a river five feet deep and twenty feet wide, extending 3,775 miles in length.

FISHING LICENSE NEEDED FOR LAKE FISHING

Permits Are Unnecessary to Fish in Streams of County.

Hancock county fisherman do not need a license to fish in the creeks and rivers in this county, according to the state fish and game authorities. Indecision is present in the minds of many regarding the fishng licenses necessary.

The law provides that where fishing is done in a stocked lake a license fee of $1 must be paid. Or as the law reads, "no male person over the age of 18 years shall fish in a stocked mendering lake of the state without first procurng fishing license."

Fishermen who desire to cast their lines into the various streams of the county do not need to procure a license though should they decide to fish in a meandering stocked lake, such as Clear Lake, a license is required.

DOES ADVERTISING PAY?

(From Kansas City Club News)

Advertising has made the Victrola Dog famous.

It has put Castoria down your throat, left bristles in your gums and then came along with a Rubberset and took them out.

It has put Sozodont, Pebecco and Pepsodent on your teeth.

It has put a Gillette against your hayfield.

It has put Arrow collars around your neck and Ingersolls around your wrist.

It has jammed your feet in Holeproof sox, put Paris garters on your legs and Tiffany rings on your fingers.

It has worn out your jaws on Wrigley's and posted you on what to buy to cure corns, warts, and bunions and ingrowing toenails.

Go anywhere you want to, do anything you wish, and advertising has had a hand in it.—absolutely.

And then some people ask, "does advertising pay?"

STRYCHNINE KILLS GOPHERS

Traps Should Be Set in Runways to Supplement Poisoning—Neighborhood Effort Best.

Soon after the ground thaws in the spring, pocket gophers begin their work of tearing up the farmers fields. The presence of the gophers is easily detected by the mounds of earth which they throw up at distances of from five to 20 feet apart. Wherever fresh mounds give evidence of gopher activity.

Because of the migrating habits of the gophers, neighborhood co-operation is most desirable in the control of the pests, but constant individual effort will keep them in check, says Fred D. Butcher, extension entomologist, Iowa State College.

Two general control methods are trapping and poisoning. Traps set in the runways should always be used to supplement other control methods. Special pocket traps are best. For poisoning gophers, use a bait made of cutting sweet potatoes, carrots or parsnips into pieces about one-half inch in diameter. Wash and drain the pieces as soon as they are cut. Over one gallon of bait sprinkle one-eighth of an ounce of powdered strychnine. Stir one or two pieces of bait into the gopher runways one or two feet from each mound. The runways may be located by means of a sharp stick or wagon endgate rod used as a probe and the bait dropped thru the holes thus made. Close the holes after inserting the bait.

SPRING CALLS FOR CLOTHES

New Touches Will Often Freshen Up Old Garments Satisfactorily

To aid womankind in its search for suitable spring wearing apparel, Miss Marie L. Roberts, offers some simple suggestions. For adding fresh touches to old garments she reccommends:

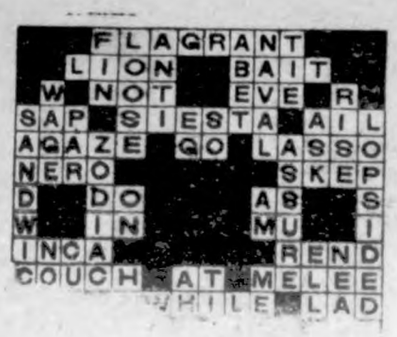
New collars and cuffs.

A change in the waistline. If you cannot wear beltless dresses have the belt go part way around.

A change in length. Dresses are shorter, but always suit the length to the figure.

Other suggestions are. Large or very thin persons should be cautious in choosing short sleeves. V-shaped necks are good for round faces. Heavy materials or printed materials add size to the figure, and plain materials decrease the size. Shiny surfaces make the figure appear larger. Soft, clinging materials emphosize thinness. Select soft colors if large and brighter colors if [illegible]

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S CROSS-WORD PUZZLE



IOWA MAY HAVE A GAS TAX IN THIRTY DAYS

Passage in House Makes it Certain; Goes to Gevernor

Des Moines, March 28,--Iowa automobile owners today were confronted with the prospect of a two cents per gallon rise in gasoline, with the adoption yesterday of the Bergman tax bill by the house, already passed by the senate.

The bill, which, its author believes will raise approximately $4,750,000 to be used in improving the Iowa highways now goes back to the senate for concurrence in amendments before it is taken to the governor for his signature

A publication clause is attached which insures imposition of the tax within 30 days if Gov. Hammill approves.

The vote on the bill was 77 to 23. In its virtually completed form the measure provides for distribution of the revenue among the counties in ration of a county's area to that of the state. The fund will be equally to the primary secondary and township roads.

Gasoline used in farm machinery and by municipal corporations for strictly civic purposes will be exempt

As passed by the house, the tax is a replacement tax in that the county road levy is made optional up to one mill.

Chief opposition to the bill was directed at the manner of distributing the revenue. Some legislators wished the fund to be divided among the counties on a basis of taxble property, others on basis of the cost of road construction in any one county, compared with the average cost of all counties.

Representatives from the more populated counties generally voted against the measure. These include Elliott of Polk, Wagner and Hansen of Scott, Forsling and Pritchard of Woodbury, Hollis of Blackhawk, Harrison and Hubbard of Potawattamie, Noble of Muscatine and a number of members from the southern counties.

WHAT CAUSES TORNADOES IN IOWA

(By E. L. Dimitry)

With the newspapers for the past two weeks carrying stories of the devasting nature of the recent tornado in Missouri, Illinois and Indiana it is interesting to note the nature and probabilty of tornadoes n Iowa.

The earth is surrounded by atmosphere to the height of about one hundred miles. This film, with its denser layers near the earth's surface, rotates with the earth. A point at the equator moves east at the rate of over 1,000 miles per hour, at Des Moines at about 700 miles per hour and zero miles at the poles. The air in the equatorial belt becomes unevly heated when the sun's rays are shining directly downward.

In the northern hemisphere the air currents moving toward the cool regions take a northeastern course, instead of one due north. This is caused, as stated above by the slower motion at points of higher latitude as Des Moines.

Except for the friction of the air with the surface of the earth, a mass of air moving from latitude 40 to latitude 45, a velocity of 40 miles per hour with respect to the surface of the earth. Friction greatly reduces this speed and, according to local conditions, a mild or stiff breeze is the result.

In the early spring when the upper strata of air is still cool as a result of winter, if a sudden rise of temperature occurs near the surface and conditions are favorable a tornado my result. Such a condition is usually brought on when intervals of sunshine warm the air rapidly, while warm southern moisture bearing air is being transported northward over the region. Towering clouds raise their heads and some times a large portion of their bodies into the rapidly moving western winds and vortices are formed for pronounced tornadoes.

In Iowa the most serious storms and tornodoes have occured in late May, June and early July. But this is no guarantee against storms in other months. Yearly from March till September we may exypect more or less damaging storms from the southwest.

PATIENT KILLED IN HOSPITAL FIRE

Blindfolded Man Unable to Escape From Chicago Institution.

Chicago.—P. J. Regan, temporarily blinded by an operation on his eyes, lost his life in a fire late at night which wrecked the fourth floor of the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat hospital and college and nearly cost the lives of a dozen other patients and nurses.

Regan was overlooked in the mad rush for safety. He had undergone his operation during the day and was still slightly dazed from the anesthetic. His eyes tightly bandaged, he groped, sightless, in the suffocating smoke until he fell.

Battalion Chief McHale stumbled over the body half an hour later and carried it down a ladder to the street. Capt. John Stege of the detective bureau had the body taken to the county hospital, where it was found that the smoke and flames had killed Regan.

The fire started in the basement of the four-story brick structure at 235 West Washington street.

On the third and fourth floors were the sleeping nurses, patients and hospital employees.

Nurse Margaret Kilgore was awakened by the crackling of flames. Her first thought was of the only woman patient, Miss Anna Schaeffer, twenty-eight years old, of Bradley place. Nurse Kilgore is a wisp of a girl, weighing 95 pounds, and Miss Schaeffer is much heavier, but the little nurse hoisted Miss Schaeffer on her back and carried her down the rear fire escape, all other means of exit being cut off.

Seek Control of All Finance Companies

Lansing, Mich.—All so-called finance corporations will be strickly regulated and absolutely controlled by the state, if an administration bill, advanced to third reading and final passage in the senate, is passed.

The measure is the result of an investigation directed a year ago by Governor Groesbeck into about forty-two companies in Michigan. In a public hearing the governor said that "many companies have been highjacking" clients' money and securities for their own profit, had been violating every known trust capacity and that honest firms are foolish to oppose the bill.

The measure was introduced by Senator Greene and would place corporation licensing and supervision in the hands of the secretary of state. State department inspectors would make regular inspections and semi-annual and yearly reports to the department would be required.

Those indicted with him are Edward S. Booth, former solicitor of the Interior department, and Gordon Campbell of Montana, an oil prospector. James A. MacGowan, a fourth member of the alleged conspiracy, was not indicted, as he appeared as a witness before the grand jury.

A report will be submitted to the President before the next session of congress, if possible.

U. S. NAVAL GUNS FAIL TO HIT AIRPLANES

Eight Targets Escape Hail of Shot During Test.

San Pedro, Cal.—Forty-four anti-aircraft guns on eleven dreadnaughts in twenty rounds of firing during force practice failed to hit the eight sleeve targets towed by airplanes at about 6,000 feet altitude, according to officers of the U. S. S. Aroostook, airplane tender.

Aboard U. S. S. Concord, off San Pedro, Cal.—The mighty voice of the main naval battle power of the nation roared out over the Pacific ocean seventy miles off shore in the greatest gunnery fire ever witnessed at sea. For six minutes eleven dreadnaughts loosed more than 600 tons of steel amid a belching of fire and inferno of noise in annual force practice.

Annihilation of the "enemy" fleet represented by targets was complete, according to observers.

But the spitting barrage of 880 shrapnel shells from the 44 anti-aircraft rifles of the dreadnaughts failed to find a mark in the sleeve targets towed by eight airplanes.

The battle line was twisted and disrupted several times by the flock of torpedoes loosed by the nineteen destroyers representing the enemy, and one of the dreadnaughts was forced to turn around completely to evade the submarine weapons.

Roosevelts Given Permit to Use Pass to Pamirs

London.—Through the good offices of the earl of Reading, viceroy of India, another route, through the Leh pass to the high Pamirs tableland, thence to Turkestan, is open to the James Simpson-Field museum expedition of Chicago for its pursuit this summer of the rare ovis poli and other game of the central Asian highlands. Col. Theodore Roosevelt, his brother, Kermit, and George K. Cherrie will lead the party.

This route is even more hazardous than the one through the Hunza pass, which cannot be used by the American party this year, because all available native carriers have been engaged by a Swedish hunting expedition. The Indian government, however, will give Colonel Roosevelt's party, which is being financed by James Simpson of Chicago, all possible assistance.

The Leh route is a dangerous and difficult trail through barren mountains.

Million Dollars Ready for Relief of Storm Victims

Chicago.—Chicago's official tornado relief committee, after but four days of actual work, reached its quota of $500,000 and spilled over some $35,000, according to William R. Dawes, chairman of the committee, who reported a total fund of $535,474.56 at the weekly luncheon of the Association of Commerce.

Governor Small signed his name to the emergency legislation appropriating $500,000 for the victims in the tornado zone.

WORKERS START REBUILDING TOWNS

Restoration Begins in Areas Hit by Tornado—Less Danger of Epidemic.

Chicago.—Southern Illinois and Indiana and other states in the path of the recent tornado are humming with industry as the work of rebuilding and restoration progresses.

Warm, sunny weather prevails in most of the stricken territory as carpenters ply hammer and saw on hundreds of new buildings and relief workers continue to give aid and comfort to thousands of injured and homeless.

Danger of an epidemic is lessened as sanitary measures are advanced. The water supply in every affected community is watched and a supply of diphtheria anti-toxin was rushed to Carbondale, the relief center, at the direction of Dr. I. D. Rawlings, director of the Illinois department of health. Doctors and nurses reported the sanitation situation much improved and that favorable condition of the weather had greatly decreased fear of any extended outbreak of disease.

With virtually all of the dead buried, J. N. Sletten, secretary of the National Funeral Directors' association, said that registration of graves had been carried out with such care that the final resting place of each victim may definitely be located.

Pending rebuilding of factories, relief workers are centering efforts on obtaining employment for workingmen, who were the greatest sufferers. Appeals were made to the state to start road construction in the Illinois area to provide temporary employment.

With three additional deaths at Griffin, Ind., the number of fatalities in five states was increased to 813, but this figure did not include a score of persons believed to have been incinerated at Murphysboro. The Red Cross announced that 2,939 persons were injured. Property loss was estimated in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

Searching parties, returning from an all-day investigation of West Frankfort ruins, announced their belief that all dead there had been accounted for. Conditions are excellent, Mayor T. Bangley wired Governor Small in announcing that troops, with the exception of medical units, no longer were needed.

At Murphysboro work was in progress on hundreds of homes in the 152 city blocks destroyed by the storm. The city was gladdened by the announcement that the Mobilie & Ohio railroad shops, employing 1,400 men, and another of its largest industries would be rebuilt. Only 15 or 20 per cent of the houses destroyed carried tornado insurance, although most of them were protected from fire. Whether insurance would be paid on buildings set on fire after the tornado passed was an undecided question.

Rehabilitation work also moved rapidly forward in Tennessee, Kentucky and Indiana. The death toll in the latter state, where Griffin and Owensville were razed and parts of Princeton destroyed, was raised to 112.

Griffin, in which building operations have started, is not suffering from the rising waters of the Wabash, as one railroad to the town is in operation, but fears were expressed for families in a score of neighboring farmhouses cut off by water from medical aid and food. The current was too swift for rowboats. The rural districts, however, were given two days' supply of food on Sunday.

COMMANDER DRAIN NAMES ASSISTANT

James F. Barton, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, formerly adjutant of the Iowa department of the American Legion, was recently named as assistant national adjutant by National Commander James A. Drain. There has been no assistant national adjutant since National Adjutant Russell Creviston was promoted from that position to the national adjutancy.

Mr. Creviston has during the present year been serving also as general secretary of the American Legion endowment fund movement, in addition to performing the duties of the adjutancy. The pressure of the work became too great and Mr. Barton was appointed to assist him.

"Shortly after my election at St. Paul Creviston expressed a desire to retire and go into other work," National Commander Drain said. "Only at my insistence and express request did he consent to stay through my administration. So it became necessary to obtain an assistant who might take over the duties of national adjutant after Creviston retires. Jim Barton was recommended by Creviston after a careful consideration had been given to other possibilities."

The new assistant national adjutant was born in Seneca, Wis., on January 17, 1886. He entered the service as a first lieutenant within ten days after war was declared in 1917. He was assigned to duty with Company G, Second infantry, Iowa National Guard. He was promoted to captain in less than a month. He saw service with Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth machine gun battalion. He was with Company D, Three Hundred and Twenty-second machine gun battalion in the army of occupation. He was also for a time judge advocate in Base Section, No. 6, of the A. E. F. He was discharged from service at Camp Dodge, Iowa, on August 8, 1919.

Barton began his active work with the Legion as commander of Fort Dodge post 130. He was elected to that position before the first national convention in 1919 and served until the fall of 1920. He was then appointed adjutant of the Iowa department and held that position until his appointment as assistant national adjutant.

As adjutant of the Iowa department, he was in a large measure responsible for the splendid record of that department, which has come to be recognized as one of the outstanding leaders in Legion activity. Prominent Legionnaires of Iowa regretted losing Barton, who has been identified so closely with their department since its very beginning.

Barton is a lawyer by profession. He was educated at Fort Dodge high school and took a course in law at the University of Iowa.

LOOK TO THE LEGION

REV. JOSEPH HORRIGAN, pastor of St. Thomas church at Kenosha, Wis., speaking of the destiny of the American Legion recently, said:

"A better citizenship and more sincere churchmen living the principles of good moral conduct will make of all of us better ingredients in this maelstrom of humankind. Live and breathe and exhale your religious principles. You can't keep the law of the land if you violate the laws of your God. The people of America today look to the members of the American Legion for a good start in this direction. They believe that the American Legion embodies the noblest specimens of American manhood. Because of this the country looks to the boys that gave the greatest and noblest service in the time of need as the real leaders of the land today."

Six Legionnaires in Senate; 45 in House

The other Legionnaires in the senate are: Brookhart, Iowa; Elkins, West Virginia; Howell, Nebraska; Means, Colorado; Reed, Pennsylvania.

There are 45 Legionnaires in the house, more than 10 per cent of the total number of representatives.

How to build up your Weight

TO BE under weight often proves low fighting-power in the body. It often means you are minus nerve-power, minus red-cells in your blood, minus health, minus vitality. It is serious to be minus, but the moment you increase the number of your red-blood-cells, you begin to become plus. That's why S. S. S., since 1826, has meant to thousands of underweight men and women, a plus in their strength. Your body fills to the point of power, your flesh becomes firmer, the age lines that come from thinness disappear. You look younger, firmer, happier, and you feel it, too, all over your body. More red-blood-cells! S. S. S. will build them.

Iowa State News

Events of Recent Occurrence Condensed for our Readers.

California lost a lot of new citizens recently when the Iowa legislature killed a state income tax.

The spring meeting of the Webster City Association of Congregationalist churches will be held at Clarion April 21st and 22nd.

There is a great demand for the films and slides showing the various phases of agriculture put out by the state college to farm bureaus.

The new coat of arms of the Thirty-second cavalry, whose headquarters are in Des Moines, bears a Sioux warrior in war bonnet, brandishing a spear and mounted on a galloping pony.

Six hundred fifty-three farmers well distributed over the state report an average of 22.2 bushels of seed corn per farm and a need of 12.7 bushels per farm, or a surplus of 74.6 per cent above needs.

A few farmers have ventured to sow oats, but very little seeding has been done, owing to recent rains and cool weather. Many farmers are getting anxious as they usually complete their oat sowing in March.

The Tourists' Service Federation of Iowa, conceived for the purpose of selling Iowa enterprises, industries and playgrounds to the world, and to the people of Iowa as well, has been organized.

The winter fishing season in the "Iowa Great lakes" group is now a thing of the past for this year. The fishing yielded probably 1,500,000 pounds of soft fish and netted the state perhaps $20,000 or more.

Voters of Cedar Rapids will decide on April 20th whether a bond issue for $800,000 shall be authorized for the purpose of erecting a war memorial building to include an auditorium that will seat at least 5,000 persons.

The United States war department will give Camp Dodge its quota of funds for permanent improvement according to an announcement made at Washington. This fund amounting to about $30,000 is to be applied on a new administration building and mess hall at the camp.

A series of "booster" meetings, in which will be discussed some of the principals of cooperative marketing together with some of the doings of the local associations, has been planned for the livestock shipping associations of Appanoose county during the second week in April.

Des Moines filed 12,450 income tax returns this year according to official figures. The number is a gain of fifty over last year. A steady and healthy increase in the business of building and loan associations in Iowa is noted in the report made by the chief of the municipal examiners of the state auditor's office.

A decrease of 18.7 per cent in the death rate of infants in Des Moines was noted in 1924. The death rate per 1,000 infants in 1923 was 63.7 and last year was 45 per 1,000. The public health center clinics last year cared for 769 babies as against 642 in 1923. The attendance at public health clinics during the year was about 4,000 children and the public health nurses on their visits administered 4,095 baths.

The United States census tells what is the biggest soil problem in Iowa. Of each 100 acres of improved farm land in the state, there are in leguminous crops, such as alfalfa, clovers and clover-timothy mixtures, only seven and one-half acres. In other words, each acre of land is in leguminous crops only one year out of 14. If Iowa's soil fertility is to be preserved, 25 acres out of every 100 should be in legumes.

The board of control has installed machinery, purchased from Indiana, for the manufacture of auto license plates under the state use system voted by the last general assembly, and will soon commence the manufacture of the plates. The contract is based on a purchase ow 700,000 pairs of plates, or 1,400,000 individual plates. The colors for 1926 plates to be delivered in time for distribution to county treasurers before Dec. 1st, are white numerals on a maroon background. The board of control will manufacture the plates with prison labor in the men's reformatory at Anamosa.

The Pleasant Valley onion district is getting ready to plant its sixty-seventh onion crop. For that length of time onions have been grown there with success. About 500 acres of onions are grown. The land is still in the hands of the original German families who started the industry. The little farms are valued at $1,000 per acre or higher, but none is for sale, so satisfactory are the returns. The 500 acres produce annually about 200,000 bushels of onions, the average price of which is around 70 cents per bushel, giving a gross return of about $140,000 annually. Land there has an average statistical valuation of $892 per acre.

An Iowa electric line has entered the motor bus field. The Fort Dodge, Des Moines & Southern Railway company has announced that it has organized a company to be known as the Fort Dodge, Des Moines & Southern Transportation company which will operate motor busses in the territory now served by the interurban.

HOGUE APPEALS FOR ECONOMY

DIRECTOR OF BUDGET MAKES REPORT PUBLIC

E. L. Hogue, director of the budget, advises the state legislature that "in the last analysis real economy is more nearly a matter of administration than legislation," and that increased economy and efficiency in state departments 'is obtainable from the sincere cooperation of all departments and all employes than from any means immediately available."

In his report, asked for in the Buser resolution, Mr. Hogue intimates that legislation devised to remedy extravagance and duplication should be enacted only after the most rigid and careful examination, and adds that his department is looking forward to such an examination during the next two years.

Asks Cooperation.

Interdepartmental cooperation, the director says, would provide, under present circumstances, "one of the greatest forces for economy and efficiency." The manner in which this "voluntary coordination of effort in carrying out the various functions and activities of the state" can best be done upon a large scale can be determined only "after a thorough analysis of the respective departments has been completed and then considered in connection with the combined organizations, duties and functions of all departments," Mr. Hogue says.

GOVERNOR SPEAKS FOR GASOLINE TAX

Utilization of road funds Iowa already has with the addition of revenue from a gasoline tax would give the state a $26,000,000 annual expenditure for the completing of its road plans, Governor John Hammill told Iowa farmers in a radio address from Station KFNF as part of the dedicatory exercises for Shenandoah's new armory. "A large bond issue at this time would break the morals of our people,' Governor Hammill said. "Those who use the highways should pay for them and there should be no increased property tax. A well organized road plan under the state system and the highway commission with a two cent gasoline tax would provide enough with funds already available to complete all the contemplated highway improvements with a reasonable time."

BANK GUARANTEE BILL DIES

State guaranty of bank deposits was rejected by the Iowa senate, at the close of a day's debating, killing that subject of legislation in the state for at least two years. The vote on the bank deposit guaranty bill, modeled after the Nebraska law and introduced by Bowman of Black Hawk, was 15 to 35. The bill was opposed on the ground that it requires banks to pay insurance on all deposits in the state without having control of the risk and that the principle of guaranteeing deposits requires strong banks to meet the losses of weaker banks or from bad judgment of other bankers.

NEW BILL GIVES U. S. TITLE TO IOWA GAME LANDS.

The Iowa senate fish and game committee has introduced a bill to grant the United States government title to the upper Mississippi wild life and fish refuge, for which congress has appropriated $1,500,000 for the creation of a 300-mile fish and game preserve extending from Rock Island to Lake Pepin. The bill would accord the federal government jurisdiction over the lands and waters of the preserve along Iowa's shores, but safeguarding Iowa's other rights.

HOUSE CONSIDERS FIRST BUD GET IN SECRET SESSION

The Iowa house began two innovations in the legislature, consideration of the first budget state appropriation bill and that behind closed doors. Heretofore salary lists, because of the personal interest in them of those who draw them, have been considered in secret in both houses; but the state appropriations, totaling altogether around $32,000,000 have never been discussed behind closed doors before.

CHILD LABOR VOTE DODGED.

The proposed federal child labor amendment is now officially dead, so far as the present session of the Iowa legislature is concerned. By a vote of 81 to 25, the house of representatives accepted a report of its constitutional amendments committee and indefinitely postponed consideration of a resolution proposing to ratify the amendment.

The Iowa senate passed two more of the bills presented by the Iowa child welfare commission, requiring state licensing of childrens boarding homes and child placing agencies. The passage of these bills in the senate brings the number of welfare bills pased by both houses to four.

The farm bureau in Monroe county is staging a war on rats, ground hogs and gophers.

Word has come to the Upped Mississippi river towns that the River Transit company which put on a line of freight barges in the St. Paul St. Louis trade last year will operate again this season.

A good move was sponsored by Governor Hammill when a preliminary organization was formed looking toward the working out of a program for the "selling of Iowa's scenic splendor and recreational advantages. Through the cooperation of civic clubs and other groups it is hoped to secure a membership of a half-million Iowans in this body.

Cajuns of Louisiana Fond of Old Customs

The Cajun of southwestern Louisiana has his own particular customs, some of them handed down by his Nova Scotian ancestors, others of more modern invention.

Often in naming his numerous children, he will stick to a single letter. Thus, in a family that has chosen the letter "O," the boys may be Odelon, Oliver, Octave, Ovide, Optah, Otis, Oto; the girls Octavie, Odelia, Ophelia, Odile, Olive, Olita, Olympe, Omeah. This system, though pleasantly alliterative, must result sometimes in confusion.

As inevitable as his cup of black coffee, is the Cajun's use of brick dust. This, pounded small, is scattered inside, and especially upon that shelflike portion of his home which, however small, he calls a gallery. In its way it is ornamental, the dull red of the dust standing out against the dark weathered gray of the unpainted planking behind.

In the better class families the French proprieties are observed, the young folk addressing their elders with the formal "you" rather than the familiar "thou." Religious duties are seldom neglected. Saturday night balls, which last through until daybreak, are ended by the dancers attending mass in a body.—Adventure Magazine.

Fine Orchestra, but Not in First Class

Many are the stories prevalent in various parts of the British empire to illustrate typical American humor. They have an idea over there that we go in largely for size. One of the latest and most characteristic has been wished on to Sir Henry Wood, who relates that at one of his concerts an enthusiastic admirer was present with an American friend.

When it was all over, the Englishman, hoping it had impressed his friend, remarked: "Magnificent orchestra, isn't it?"

But the Yankee, being one of those who always boast of the wonders of "Amurrika" when abroad, was not giving anything away.

"Fine, you say?" he answered. "Well, it's a good little band in his way, but if you're using 'fine' in a sense of its being large, great Christopher, you should see one of our musical combinations in the States! Why, in one of the orchestras over there, the kettledrum player is so far away from the conductor, that he has to come in three bars ahead of time to allow the sound to travel!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

Testing Gold

To test gold, dig the point of a knife into it, and if it powders it is not gold. Gold is richly yellow, but to tell it from pyrites when in very minute flecks, turn it so that the light catches it from various directions. Gold will not alter in shade, but pyrite does. A drop of nitric acid will cause a fuming on pyrites, but does not affect gold.

You must pan creek sands and gravels to find gold. It may be near surface, but generally the heaviest deposits of placer gold are on and close to bed rock, which may be a few feet or many feet deep. Gold placers are best found in a big bend in a creek, which allows it to be deposited, or on the upper side of a reef or ledge crossing the stream. Sometimes it is a dry deposit, up where the stream formerly flowed, and is called a "bench" placer.

Gold is worth a little more than $20 per troy ounce and is paid for at mints or smelters at the rate of about that price after refining.—Victor Shaw, in Adventure Magazine.

Wood as Polisher

An interesting use of rotten wood is in the polishing of the fine parts of the highest grade Swiss and French watches. Formerly this material was more extensively employed than at present, being largely supplanted by machinery and benzine. The escape parts and small screws are still in large part polished by hand and rotten wood. The value of the rotten wood used annually in Switzerland for this purpose is about $4,000, the best quality bringing a price of $1 a pound. What is wanted is a yellowish white silky material, soft and spongy, in which the growth rings are still visible.—J. S. Record, in American Forests and Forest Life.

Tomato Not Long Popular

Tomatoes were probably first grown in the Sixteenth century in Peru. They were grown in an ancient time in Mexico, but they did not become an economic fruit until about 100 years ago. Up until that time (1830) they were grown for ornament and were called the love apple. It was not until about 1870 that decided steps were taken to improve the tomato commercially. A. W. Livingston, seedsman in Columbus, Ohio, brought out the old variety known as Trophy. The tomato was grown as early as 1596 in England, mostly in hothouses, and as early as 1812 in Italy.

Taking of Photograph Once Tedious Process

In the first attempts to make a photograph in the early part of the Eighteenth century, the subject to be photographed sat between the source of light and a sheet of sensitized paper fastened on a board. His shadow blocked off a certain proportion of the light rays, and as a result his profile in silhouette was left on the paper. This image, however, faded in a few minutes.

Even as late as 50 years ago, taking a single picture was often a day's work, and required such skill and expert knowledge and such elaborate, costly, and cumbersome equipment that the few who had mastered the art were glad to capitalize their knowledge by utilizing it professionally.

The earliest sunlight picture of a human face is supposed to be a daguerreotype of Miss Dorothy Draper, and was taken by her brother, Professor Draper, in 1840. The subject had to sit motionless in bright sunlight for almost six minutes.

Didn't Seem Fair

A business man who had motored out to his summer camp for the week-end met his little daughter at the bridge and presented her with a small sack of candy. Just before they reached camp they overtook the small barefoot boy who brought them milk each morning.

"Give the little boy some candy, Gertie," her father suggested.

Gertie picked out a small piece, but her father took the bag and poured out several pieces into the boy's outstretched hand.

After the boy had gone Gertie said reproachfully, "Papa, why did you give that milk boy nearly all my candy?"

"Why, my dear, you must be generous! Think of all the nice milk he brings, and they don't charge much for it."

"Oh, well," said the little girl, still reproachfully, "I only had a few bits of candy, and he's got a whole cow full of milk."—Youth's Companion.

Turbans and Nests

The turban is a fashionable headdress in Burma, and each girl eagerly looks forward to the time when it will be her privilege to swathe her head in yards and yards of dark cloth. But until she has found a young man who is willing to build her a bamboo house and to raise rice for her, she cannot wear this coveted headdress. Because among the Kachins unmarried girls are not permitted to wear a turban nor do they let their hair grow long. They wear bobbed hair and have done so for centuries. But the day a Kachin girl is married she lets her hair grow and binds it up with the turban, which she wears with pride. For the turban marks her as a married woman.—Family Herald.

How Crocodiles "Hunt"

The scent, sight and hearing of crocodiles are most acute, a writer in the New York Herald-Tribune remarks. Their favorite method of hunting is to lie immersed in water, or under brush, grass or bushes near a drinking place, and when a victim bends its neck to drink, by a swift rush it is seized by nose, leg or tail and crushed in the powerful jaws of the crocodile. The powerful tail also is a valuable aid to a crocodile when in a battle. Often when a large animal, like a deer or goat, is browsing near the bank of a river, a crocodile may quietly steal close to it and by a well calculated stroke of its tail stun the animal and knock it into the water.

Licensed to Drink Coffee

Prohibition applied to coffee drinking at one time. In the year 1781 in Germany only a few rich holders of government licenses drank coffee and deputies were employed to spy upon the common people to see that they did not have coffee. These deputies used to follow the smell of roasting coffee to seek out those who did not have permits. In consequence they were cordially disliked and were called "coffee smellers" by the indignant populace.—Family Herald.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON "SUCKER LISTS"

"Ever since I bought that $500 electric company bond, Aunt Emmy,' said Helen, "I have been pestered by all sorts of bond salesmen to buy other things. I should like to invest again, but I am bewildered. Every day or so I see something that sounds so good. But I don't know what to do."

"That reminds me," said Aunt Emmy, fishing through her work basket and taking out some clippings from her needle book. "I have an article from a magazine that will help. The writer gave some questions to make a bond salesman answer in writing and said that if the salesman were on the square he would answer the questions satisfactorily. Here they are," and Aunt Emmy began to read:

"'1. Will my bank say that the house which is offering the security is reputable?

"'2. Give an exact description of the security?

"'3. What provision is made for paying off this and other securities of the company?

"'4. What is the nature of the business of the company?

"'5. How much of a margin did the company earn annually over all its depreciation and interest charges for each of the last ten years?

"'6. What dividends has the company paid on its stock for each of the last ten years?

"'7. What are the company's total assets and liabilities and has it sufficient funds to carry on its business?

"'8. What are the experience and reputation of the men controlling and operating the company?'

"Then the next thing to do is to go to your banker and let him check up all this information for you," added Aunt Emmy. "Now that you know your name is on a 'sucker list' be doubly careful."

"What's a 'sucker list,' Aunty?"

"It is a list of the names of people who have purchased securities or inquired about them. Such lists are bought by so-called investment brokerage houses all over the country. Lots of bad securities are sold through unscrupulous brokers writing to the names on those lists."

"Oh, that's it, is it?" exclaimed Helen. "I suppose the poor people are flattered at getting such letters I know I was."

"Just so," Aunt Emmy said, with a smile.—Anne B. Aymes.

HOW BANKERS HELP

Seventeen students are securing an education in the Georgia State College of Agriculture through financial aid which the State Bankers Association is giving. In 1923 the Association increased its annual dues so as to contribute toward the education of boys and girls in club work who could not otherwise receive a higher education. This year, therefore, $1,000 was put into a trust fund with the College to be loaned to students who need help. It was placed in what is known as the "Ex-President's Fund," a fund which has been receiving voluntary contributions from the retiring presidents of the Bankers Association since 1915. In amount the fund is now $7,153. Fifty students have been helped prior to this year making a total of sixty-seven.

THE FRIENDLINESS OF MODERN BANKING

By WILLIAM E. KNOX

President American Bankers Association

Until a few years ago savings banks were extremely austere institutions. They were founded to do the kindliest thing in the world, that is, to take care of the savings of poor people, but they did it in a most repellent way. They did not extend to their banking business any of the courtesies or any of the amenities of life whatever. They simply took the money, did the depositor the favor of taking it, and gave it back to him when he wanted it. And then they considered their full duty done.

William E. Knox

The tellers and clerks treated the depositors as though they were entirely beneath them. I, myself, heard a depositor, an old Irishwoman, say to a teller who had been snappish with her: "Then you better keep a civil tongue in your head. It is the likes of me that keeps the likes of you in your place." In that brief and caustic and well-deserved comment she had summed up the whole situation in a nutshell.

There was nothing warm, nothing cordial, but as the years went by those who worked at the windows got on friendly and kindly relations with the people coming to the windows. Here and there some man got so close to the people that they began to tell him their personal affairs and ask for his advice, and of late years the banks, too, have been stressing the human element. They have struck a better way of approaching people.

They have taken steps, for instance, to try to get as close as they can to the foreign element. That is one of the great problems in all the large

Poetic Language

How then do we distinguish poetic language? The fact is, I think, that there is no hard and fast distinction. It has often been asserted that by poetic language we mean the presence of metre. Now, as we shall see, metre is, beyond doubt, the kind of rhythm most suitable as a rule for the purposes of poetry. But metre is simply one of the devices available to poetic expression; and if it happens that some other kind of rhythm will do just as well or better, and if everything else we require is there, it seems merely arbitrary to withhold the title of poetry. A definition of poetry would surely look very foolish, if it would exclude the "English Versions of Job" or the "Song of Songs."—Lascelles Abercrombie, in "The Theory of Poetry."

Fine Distinction Made Between Common Words

"Loan" as a verb is extensively used in the United States. There is some authority for such usage since it has so appeared from time to time in literature over the last four or five hundred years. Such usage, however, is frowned upon by grammarians who insist that "loan" is a noun only, says the Literary Digest.

Dictionaries, which must be simply recorders of the language as it is used, recognize "loan" as a verb, meaning "to lend money, especially on interest," and Doctor Vizetelly in his "Desk Book of Errors in English" says: "'Loan, lend'; one may raise (put an end to) a 'loan' by paying both principal and interest, and another may 'lend' money to do so. The use of 'loan' as a verb, meaning 'to grant the loan of or lend, as ships, money, linen, provisions, etc.,' dates from the year 1200 and is accepted as good English. Some purists, however, characterize it colloquial." To some ears "lend" may be preferable, but "loan" is not incorrect, and has the support of Acts 34 and 35 of Henry VIII (1542), Langley (1644), Fossenden (1729), Calhoun (1834), Brownson (1847), Bonamy-Price (1800) the North American Review, February, 1901, etc.

Spiders in Amazon Big as Small Rat

A traveler who has recently returned from an expedition into the forests of the Amazon tells that he was much more frightened by the huge spiders he encountered than by the jaguars, according to London Answers. There is certainly something awe-inspiring in his description of a species of Amazon spiders as creatures with long legs, fat, black bodies, about the size of a young rat, and the wickedest, most fiendish eyes imaginable!

These spiders make "trap doors" on the ground, beautifully camouflaged, and so perfectly balanced that they shut by their own weight. Beneath them are tunnels or pits in which the huge spiders watch for their prey.

Another spider is spotted like a leopard and spins a web quite a yard across. The strands of this huge web, suspended between two trees, are so strong and tough that if a small bird flies into them it is unable to escape before the arrival of the spider, which makes short work of its struggles.

Children

Some people without little children seem to have complete lives, but they are only a few. In these days, when we are so keenly interested in the future in new forms of education, and in the actual instincts of the species, it seems as if children have more to add to our lives even than formerly. No parent who gets away with the job can be an egotist, a neurotic, narrow, vain or weak. No parent with any mind at all can help feeling close to the springs of life, and in touch with the cradle of the race. The same extended reality may be obtained by teachers, or by others in helpful and steady contact with the young, but the person on whom the children make none of their confident demands, whom they never consult about the rules of life and the opening wonders of nature, is all too likely, as he grows old, to lose the youthfulness that stays with the fortunate to the end.—Norman Hapgood in Heart's International.

Origin of Arabian Horse Never Traced

The early history of the Arabian horse is shrouded in that impenetrable veil beyond which investigators have been unable to discover a satisfactory path to knowledge.

Recognizing the thoroughbred as a fixed type of highest quality, resulting from painstaking and careful mating to obtain particular results, many students are agreed that the Arabian might have been originated and perpetuated in the same way, says the National Geographic Magazine. On the other hand, the Arabian and the Barb of northern Africa are so alike, and yet so distinct in every possible way from the ancient horses of the steppes and of the European areas that admirers of the Arabian and Barb are unwilling to assign them to any but a distinct classification of their own.

There have been many hundreds of books written on the horse. A lifetime devoted to the study has brought the conviction that a large majority of these writings, as far as examined by me, contained little original matter, and that those which may be regarded as authoritative must be considered in the broad light of recorded history and of scientific discoveries in order to assign a correct value to their conclusions.

The preponderance of evidence favors the belief that the Arabian horses were obtained through Egypt, from Libyan tribes of northern Africa, and that by long and careful mating the superior type of Arabian horse has been maintained through many centuries.

Scriptures Say Little of the Barber's Art

The word barber is only once mentioned in the Scriptures, namely, in Ezekiel 5:1, which reads: "And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and upon thy beard. . . ."

Although barbers are not expressly mentioned, yet from the constant mention of shaving and the incident of Delilah sending for a man to shave Samson there can be no doubts that his class existed among the ancients. The Hebrews were particularly careful of their head and beard, and all seem to have applied the razor except the Nazarites, who were untouched by it from their birth. The Egyptian barbers were called khak or shavers, and they are represented at work in a tomb of Beni-Hassan, of the Twelfth dynasty, holding their razors in the hand, which have a short cylindrical handle, with a broad, flat blade of bronze on a line with the axis of the handle.

Rover's Friend

Rover, the pet dog owned by Walter Pratt of Bowdoinham, Me., gets along famously with the family cat, and the cat always sleeps at night between the paws of Rover. One night, after the family had retired, it was aroused by a scratching and a low barking at the front door. When the door was opened in walked the cat, with one foot caught in a trap; behind came Rover, carefully holding up the chain of the trap. Far up a neighboring stream trappers had set traps for muskrats, and Kitty evidently walked into one. Rover must have heard her cry and gone to the rescue, for he had evidently searched, found the trapped kitten and lifted the trap from the water; then freeing his friend as much as possible, carried the chain all the way home.—New York World.

Tree Toad Changes Color

It is a well-known fact that tree toads or tree frogs can change their color through a considerable range, from nearly white to nearly black, in harmony with the surface on which they are resting. Thus they take on the hues of the trees and shrubs on which they live. The tree frogs form the connecting link between the true frogs and toads. They live chiefly in trees which they climb by means of their claw-shaped toes. They are small and are more active and brighter in color than true frogs. They utter loud piping noises. Even though these creatures live in trees they return to the water to lay their eggs. The hind legs are long as in ordinary frogs, but since they jump very little if at all the muscles of these limbs are slightly developed.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Animals Fight Like Men

The armaments of animals are strikingly like those used by man. There are few means of offense and defense used by soldiers that are unlike what may be found in the animal and also the insect kingdom. A study of the methods of defense among animals is most interesting and instructive. Nature's habit of using the fighting instinct of animals as one of the greatest means for the development and the survival of species must be combated before even the fighting instinct in man is quenched.

Strong for Honor System

It was proposed to establish the honor system in a large eastern penitentiary. The matter was put up to the prisoners themselves, it being figured that they would know better than anyone else whether they could play the game honorably. It was put to a vote.

"Hey, Muley," said one tough citizen to another, "did yer vote for the honor system?"

"Sure, kid, four times."—Jackson Gazette.

Roosevelt's Idea of Man

It is not the critic who counts, nor the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat; who strives valiantly; who errs and may fail again and again, because there is no effort without error and shortcoming, but who does actually strive to do the deeds; who does know the great enthusiasm, the great devotion; who spends himself in a worthy cause, who, at the best, knows in the end the triumph of high achievement and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Model Lover a Bricklayer

Common brick has always played an important part in the building industries throughout the world. Volumes have been written on the history and uses to which bricks have been put, but not on their romance, says the New York Herald-Tribune.

In the Italian city of Bologna there remain two towers of brick, sole survivors of approximately 180 similar ones said to have been erected between the Tenth and Thirteenth centuries. Legends say it was the custom to knights to win their ladies fair by erecting brick towers, taller than the one constructed by rivals.

EDITORIAL RAW MATERIAL

The editor sat in his sanctum running his fingers through his hair and wondering where his next meal would come from. The door creaked and in walked a woman leading a tall gaunt boy with freckles the size of hickory nuts on his fce. His clothes wee too small fo him, and he looked as if he had been put into them with a gloves strecher.

"Be you the editor " the woman inquired. "Yep," meekly answered that humble personage, wondering if she was going to horsewhip him or merely going to pay her subscription.

"This is my son Hezekiah," the woman continued. "I want him to learn to be an editor."

Madam,' 'asked the man who moulded public opinion on an empty stomach, "What makes you think that he was qualified for the business?"

"He was never known to tell the truth," the doting mother replied, "and he can live on less than it would take to feed a good healthy humming bird. He loves to rise at four o'clock in the morning and work until midnight, and the more people abuse him, the better he likes it. At the age of thirteen he took the Keely cure, and he can smoke a corn cob pipe like a fifty-six year old native of North Carolina."

"Madam,' 'said the editor in an awed and subdued tone, "Your boy will mke a great editor. I will put him to work this morning at the wages of thirty-six cents a week, and he can sleep on the old papers n the corner.

The woman withdrew, leaving the boy, who was soon taking his first lesson in journalism sweeping down the stairs and cleaning the windows with an ink-smeared rag.

SURE, YOU KNOW HIM

You know him. He's the fellow who can always do everything much better than anybody else. He's the fellow who is always right. His radio hookup is better than any of the other hookups in the neighborhood. His wife is the best cook in the country. His boy is smarter than your boy. His house is warmer inwnter cooler in summer, than any other house he ever heard of.

His way of doing thing is always the best way. He can give the minister points on theology and tell him how to preach better sermons.

This wise bird is an authority on everything. He will tel the man who paints his house how to mix his paints, and how to apply them, in spite of the fact that he has had no experience with paint. He knows more about carpenter work than men who took four years to learn their trade and have worked at it for forty years. He drifts into a newspaper office and tells the editor and reporters just what sort of news they should print, and how they should print it. Of course he has never done newspaper work. But he's an expert just the same.

He tells his wife how to run her part of the housework He is an expert advisor on the subjects of cooking, though the only things he ever tries to cook wither, burn or fall flat. He knows just where President Coolidge errs in his messages to congress. He could bring back prosperity to the nations of Europe if they only had the sense to ask his advice. He has a pet plan to regulate traffic that would eliminate accidents.

In fact this paragon of wisdom is a success at everything. He admits it.

The curious part of it all, however is that he so infrequently succeeds in doing much of anything for himself or for his family. He is so deeply interested in giving expert advice and criticism on the big affairs that he has little time to devote to the business of making a good living.—Fall River News.

ERROR TO REDUCE CLOVER ACEAGE IN SPRING

When the price of common red clover seed is high, the acreage seeded down in the spring is usually cut down. Some farmers figure that they can afford to pay only so much for clover seed and when that limit in price is exceeded, many sow timothy alone. Undoubteldy there is a limit to the price a man could afford to pay for clover seed, at the same time one should not lose sight of the fact that timothy is a very poor substitute for clover. It is not worth one-half as much per ton for feeding value as is clover or any other legume hay.

At any rate good complexions die young.

Wild Creatures Die Fast When Captives

The average person who visits a zoo for study and enjoyment often fails to realize the expert care and heavy expenditure demanded in its upkeep. Death takes a frequent toll among the animals and the birth rate cannot begin to make replacement. The four corners of the earth must be scoured for so many an empty cage would confront visitors, says the New York Times.

Every month a proportion of the familiar animals die, and rare beasts and birds with strange names also succumb. Every month purchases are made that may range from 25 cents for a box tortoise to $900 for a pair of Gelada baboons.

Usually the highest mortality is among the birds. Next come the mammals, the severest financial loss. Reptile casualties are lowest. A report of the Bronx zoological park shows the death of twelve mammals, including a bonnet macaque and a white-faced sapajou, of three reptiles, crocodile and two tortoises and fifty birds in a single month. However, the increasing skill of curators and keepers in the handling of wild animals is keeping the death rate within bounds.

Many Poisonous Fish in the Philippines

Fish with poisonous flesh are a danger to be reckoned with by dwellers and travelers in the Philippine tropics. Dr. Albert M. Herre of the bureau of science at Manila has investigated the reports that there are poisonous fishes in the islands and states that in many cases they are true. According to Doctor Herre, the most violently poisonous species belong to the puffers and porcupine fishes. The poisonous property is due to the presence in various parts of their bodies of a substance chemically similar to the deadliest of the mushroom poisons. "The poisonous quality of these fishes is well known to all the tribes dwelling along tropical coasts," says Doctor Herre, "but strange to say there is hardly a fishing village in the Philippines where there are not foolish or reckless people who eat these fishes. Not a year goes by without several deaths. The poison seems to act first on the nerves of the alimentary canal, and soon afterward on all the muscles of the body, giving rise to violent spasms, during which the patient dies in from one to five hours."

Weeping Stove Pipes

Weeping stove pipes, from the joints of which a tarlike liquid leaks out, is often a difficult trouble to remedy. It is due to insufficient draft. The smoke, moving slowly through the pipes, condenses and the liquid so formed oozes out at the joints of the pipes. Sometimes having the pipes on an incline, upward to the chimney, will cause the smoke to pass along more quickly. Sometimes raising the chimney will increase the draft. Some find that a little opening in the pipe next the chimney, with a sliding cover, increases the draft up the chimney, when open, and so causes the smoke to pass out quickly. It all comes to this—increase the draft and the heat of the pipes and so cause the smoke to pass out so quickly that it cannot cool and condense in the pipes.—Family Herald.

Historic Mecca Temple

The Caaba is the temple of Mecca, said to occupy the exact spot of the tabernacle that was let down from heaven at the prayer of repentant Adam, after his wanderings of 200 years. According to tradition, it was built by Ishmael, assisted by his father, Abraham, and contains the famous "Black Stone of Mecca." The temple has been twice rebuilt within historical times, but still retains its original shape. It is in the form of a cube, 50x30 feet, and about forty feet in height. It is richly decorated, and used to be annually recovered with handsome brocaded hangings presented by the sultan of Turkey. The interior is finished in marble and silver-gilt plating, and contains beautiful silk hangings, but is devoid of objects of genuine interest.—Kansas City Star.

Cleansing Uses for Corks

Old corks can be used in many valuable ways. Spots and blemishes on windows will nearly always disappear if rubbed with a dry cork. Moistened with turpentine, it will remove marks from white glaze bricks, and rust spots on metal give way to cork dipped in paraffin; spots on linoleum by cork dipped in gasoline. Burnt marks on pie dishes and plates will vanish if treated with a cork dipped in wet salt.

An effective foot warmer for cold winter nights may be made by cutting corks into small bits, filling a flannel bag with them, and heating for ten or fifteen minutes.—Southern Pharmaceutical Journal.

Toll of London Fogs

According to one authority, says Popular Mechanics, a single London fog may cost more lives than a pitched battle. The period of the greatest prevalence of the dense mists is in December, with the other winter months not far behind. At this season of the year the death rate from lung diseases reaches its height. The heavy, moisture-laden air aggravates such maladies the lack of sunlight reduces physical resistance and illness frequently results from chills caused by the dampness. Mental depression is considered another harmful effect.

Cattle and Poultry as Weather Prophets

Can meteorologists, even with the aid of wireless, forecast weather with more accuracy than country folk who watch nature's own barometers? If cattle in a field scratch themselves vigorously, or stand with their tails to the wind the countryman will tell you it is going to rain and his prediction is invariably correct. If the fowls come out to feed on a wet morning there is little chance of it clearing up that day, says the Flower Grower. The appearance of toads, frogs and earthworms in unusual numbers invariably means rain, and so do the singing of blackbirds, the falling of soot or the creaking of furniture. If the ants in the garden build their walls frequently or the house sparrow keeps to the ridge country residents prepare for rain, though if birds' frequent the eaves they will confidently prophesy fine weather.

Storms from the northwest or southwest are usually brief, but a storm from the northeast is likely to be long and severe. A veering wind brings fine weather, a backing wind means rain. These are the countryman's barometer. Their significance is based upon the observation and experience of centuries, and the forecast made from them is quite as reliable as any issued from the meteorological observatories.

"We've got to get a doctor here in a jiffy," he muttered. "And can't we stir up some of those servants—"

He was interrupted by the appearance of Jenks, who had knocked unheard and entered. He hurried to his master's side with an expression of acute concern on his round face.

"The doctor, sir?" he said, answering Renshaw's words before the latter had finished speaking. "I will telephone to Wainley at once. There's a very good doctor there, I've heard—Doctor Morris. Then I will get Doctor Stanley on the telephone—unless there's something more urgent here, sir?"

"No. Tell the local man to bring a nurse, if he can find one. And get in touch with Doctor Stanley as soon as you can."

Jenks disappeared. Renshaw rendered to the unconscious man such first aid as his experience suggested. When he had done the little that could safely be done, he turned to Verity.

"You better get into something warmer," he said gently. "I will keep watch here."

She looked surprised, then glanced down at herself and slowly flushed. Her unstockinged feet were in low, heelless slippers. A light silk dressing gown had been hastily thrown over her sheer nightgown. Her black hair, in two long heavy braids, hung almost to her knees. Renshaw glanced at Madame Hvoeslef, whose general appearance was similar to Verity's, and the look included the foreigner in his suggestion. Both women hastened to obey it, hurrying out of the room with a little flurry of self-consciousness.

Renshaw sat beside the bed and studied the patient. He was in for a vigil. He raised the closed eyelids of the old man, looked again at the congested pupils of the eyes, and shook his head.

Jenks stole into the room, and Renshaw was conscious of a feeling of infinite relief in the support of his efficient presence. Mentally, for the moment at least, he held Jenks between himself and the storm as if the efficient butler had been an umbrella.

"Doctor Morris will be here in less than an hour, sir," Jenks reported. "And I got Doctor Stanley, too. He will start as soon as he is dressed. That ought to get him here before daylight." He drew nearer the bed. "What is it, sir?" he added in a whisper. "A stroke?"

"I'm afraid so. It looks like it. Better stir up James. There may be things to do."

"I have done so, sir. Hart's here, too."

Renshaw stared.

"Hart?" he repeated. "We left him in town."

"Yes, sir. It was his unexpected return that got me out of bed. His room is in the garage, and I had the key; he had to call me to get in. He came out on the one o'clock train, thinking we might need him in the morning, since you had sent his friend back to town."

Renshaw was mildly amused. No doubt Hart was furious over the interruption to his "pers'nal" business. Just the same, it was a good thing he had come back. There would be all sorts of things to do tomorrow.

"Well, we may need him. I'm glad he's back."

"Anything more I can do, sir?" The anxious eyes of Jenks were on the unconscious face of his master.

"No, thanks. Just be ready, within reach."

"Yes, sir."

Jenks left the room. As he was about to close the door behind him, Verity returned. She was stockinged and slippered, and she wore a deep flame-colored garment, simple but beautiful, which Renshaw vaguely classified as a tea-gown. He rose as she crossed the room and stood at his side. Her lips quivered as she looked down at the mask on the pillow.

"You don't think he will die, do you?" she whispered.

"No; I think he has a good chance to get over this."

"He was so happy at dinner," she said brokenly.

She leaned forward, brooding over the sick man, and Renshaw watched her with growing sympathy. There was, he knew, a very beautiful relation between her and her grandfather, who, moreover, seemed the only prop in her life. She would be lost without him, even though she might be, as she seemed, too self-sufficient to need a prop. Possibly she could go on if this one were withdrawn; but she would certainly suffer great loneliness—

She turned and looked at him. It was a new look, odd, direct, and, for the first time, personal. She not only saw him: she looked below the surface of him.

"You have been very kind, Mr. Renshaw," she said, and added simply: "it is a comfort to know you are here."

For a moment he did not answer. He could not. The few words had given him a sensation as new as the one her look had aroused. Under them his heart grew warm, his soul seemed to stretch its wings. She had ceased to despise him. She was turning to him in her trouble. And though she had despised him but a short day ago, though she turned to him now only because there was no one else to turn to, something deep in the man responded. It was merely the stirring of former impulses and ideals, but it meant that there was convalescence for more than one sick man in that quiet room.

"You may be sure I will do all I can," he said at last; and under the words lay the force of a new resolution.

At the end of forty minutes the sound of an approaching motor announced the arrival of the doctor from Wainley. Almost immediately that welcome personage was in the sick-room. With a mere nod to the two watchers, he hurried to the side of his new patient.

Doctor Morris, though a country practitioner, appeared to be a man who knew his business. Nevertheless, he was obviously relieved when he learned that another man, the distinguished Doctor Stanley of New York, would arrive later to take charge of the case.

Under his care the patient began to breathe more normally. Renshaw called Verity's attention to the fact, and tried to persuade her to go back to her room and rest. But the girl shook her head. She had taken her grandfather's left hand, and though he had not yet opened his eyes he seemed subconsciously aware of the human contact. When it relaxed he was restless; its renewal quieted him.

Doctor Morris suggested that, while it would be wise for him to remain in the house, he could do with a bit of sleep if they would lead him to a room somewhere near. Jenks, who had followed him into the sick-room acted upon the suggestion with his usual efficiency, and threw in a drink and a light repast. Warmed by these attentions, the doctor retired optimistically. The sick-room grew very quiet. Renshaw rose to ease Verity's position from time to time. It was at one of these intervals that the old man opened his eyes.

"Watch!" Panted Campbell. "Take Charge!"

For a long moment he stared without intelligence at the two young faces bending over him. Then, very slowly, recognition crept into his gaze. It fixed on Verity with a look of content, next on Renshaw with a growing expression of strain and anxiety. His face puckered like that of a child about to cry. He struggled to speak, and persisted in the attempt when the secretary begged him to cease. Twice the words he wished to utter died on his stiff lips. The third time they came out, thickly but distinctly—the result of a supreme effort.

"Watch!" panted Campbell. "Take . . . charge!"

He held the secretary's gaze with his own till he knew the message had been understood.

"Yes, sir," said Renshaw, very distinctly. "I will do exactly as you say."

The drawn lines in the fine old face relaxed. The lids fell over the congested eyes. The patient showed utter exhaustion, combined with the content of one who has carried out a vital purpose.

Chapter VIII

The Vigil.

"What did he mean?"

It was Verity who asked the question half an hour later, when it became clear that the old man's soul had again drifted far out upon some uncharted sea. But he was breathing more naturally and the drawn lines of his face had almost disappeared.

"I don't quite know. I've been thinking about it." Renshaw's absent tones proved that he was still thinking about it.

"It was natural enough for him to ask you to take charge. That is what he would do." Verity spoke with proud humility. "But what did he mean by telling you to 'watch'?"

Renshaw looked at her with a throb of pity. She was no longer a self-contained and slightly arrogant young person. She was merely a girl in deep trouble. She should have no suspicion, he decided, of the sinister undercurrents at Tawno Ker.

"Wasn't it, perhaps," he suggested, "a subconscious association with Madame Hvoeslef's leather case? Weren't you all rather anxious until that was safe?"

Her face cleared at once.

"That was it, I think. It must have been. He had felt a sense of responsibility; we all had. Yes,"—she was thinking it out as she spoke—"that must have been it."

"And of course the responsibility is over now," Renshaw reminded her.

How much did David Campbell know? What had happened in that room before he fell? Had he heard the Thing? Had it, perhaps, extended its activities to Campbell's wing of the house? Had he seen the blue circle? And was his present condition the result of the excitement following these causes? Or was it only the result of some physical condition due to the old man's age? Renshaw wanted to think that it was—it was so natural a theory and explained everything so satisfactorily.

And yet—that warning! That gasped-out poignant warning, stammered in such agony by those stiff lips. The secretary's reflections, having swung around a circle, were back at the starting point. Only two things in the whole queer buisness were certain: he, Renshaw, would "watch," and he would "take charge."

He experienced an impersonal relief as he recalled Miss Campbell's attitude in the matter. She had heard her grandfather's command. Whether or not she eventually resented it, she would almost certainly obey it. Its only effect might be to make her dislike Renshaw more, which he firmly assured himself would be an unimportant detail.

In speculating about her possible future attitude, he had forgotten her actual presence now. He rose and went to her side.

"Miss Campbell," he said in an urgent undertone, "I wish you would go to your room and sleep. You have been under a big strain, and you are beginning to show it. Please go, if only for a few hours. I will watch here, of course; and I promise to call you if there is the slightest change."

She looked as if she wanted to protest but had not the strength.

"Draw your hand away very slowly and gently," he suggested. "He may not notice it."

She began an almost imperceptible withdrawal of the fingers held fast in Campbell's shrunken palm. But, at the first suggestion of a movement in them, the old hand closed on the young one like a vise. She actually winced under the force of the grip. Then she looked up at Renshaw. There was an expression in her eyes he had never before seen there, though he had seen it in the eyes of other women—the look made up of alarm, pride, and tenderness that women wear when the men they love are suddenly dependent upon them.

"You see?" she breathed.

"Yes. But release your hand and I will give him mine. Possibly he won't know the difference."

Verity's beautiful upper lip curled a trifle. There was a strong suggestion of her former half-careless scorn in the side glance she gave him. But he had put his left hand on hers and was gently drawing the latter away. Simultaneously he slipped the first two fingers of his other hand into the sick man's groping, hollowed palm. The palm settled over them an instant, then rejected them with an almost fierce gesture and groped for the small hand it had held.

"Lie back in your chair for a moment, anyway," Renshaw ordered. "Relax your muscles while you have a chance. Then we'll see whether he really wants you. That groping and gripping of his hand may be purely reflex."

She shook her head with a lingering hint of scorn in the gesture, but she lay back as he directed, wincing visibly over the protest of her tortured muscles.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Would Be a Handicap

"I cannot marry you"—that was the burden of the young girl's reply to the old millionaire.

Many, many times he had asked her to reconsider her decision, but in the end he despairingly realized that she could never be his. Almost angrily he upbraided her:

"Even Cupid," he said, "could do nothing with you. You're like an iceberg. Why, a hundred Cupids might shoot you all day long, but not one arrow would make any impression on your stone-cold heart."

She thought for a moment, then:

"Not if they used an old beau," she replied cuttingly.

Community Building

Find Improvement Well Worth Time and Money

One good example of a village that was not well planned originally, but now has been transformed into an extremely pleasing place, is Weston, Mass. Weston formerly had a large swamp area in its center. This has been drained, graded, seeded to grass, and planted to pine, fir and chestnut trees. A new town hall and a fire station have been built opposite the entrance to the common. Public buildings now are centrally grouped. Old, unsightly structures have been torn down. The improvements were planned by a landscape architect. It took 25 years to put the plan through, but everyone in Weston now believes the enterprise was worth the time and money it cost.

A village that was started with a good plan and has realized it is Patterson, Calif. This village and colony of irrigated farms, occupying 18,000 acres, were planned in 1910. Roads leading to the village were strategically located and planted with trees and shrubs. The village itself has eight streets radiating from a civic center, where the public buildings are situated. In the last four years the residents of the village have built a public library, a community club house, a concrete swimming pool and a grammar school, and have provided a tourist park.

Ugly Village Called Detriment to Farmer

Beauty is overtaking the drab American village, according to observations of the Department of Agriculture in a current study of village planning and its benefits.

Although nearly 20,000,000 persons live in American villages and a farming population of 30,000,000 largely depends upon them for business, educational, and social purposes, the department found they are "usually unattractive and often very ugly," suffering by comparison in this respect with those of other countries. The start that is being made toward improvement and beautification has proved in every case, it was said, a material asset as well as an esthetic one.

Pointing out that, "as the farmer's chief point of contact with outside interests, the village can make a big contribution to the happiness of farm life," the department asserted that an attractive village with good streets and convenient approaches and recreation spots was "an important influence in stabilizing farm life and counteracting the attractions of the cities for the young people of the farm."

Study Plant Needs

The general conditions of a garden cannot supply all plants, or perhaps any plant with those obtaining in the native situation. Right here steps in the skillful, well-posted gardener and supplies by artificial means a compensation for the lack of natural conditions. All who garden should do likewise, or leave gardening to those who will and do. Plants have wonderful powers of adaptation, but the farther we meet them on their journey toward local conditions, the greater will be our success in growing them. A striking case of adaptation is that of the camphor tree, which in its native habitat thrives best with an annual rainfall of 230 inches. Though it thrives here, it does much better in the damp climate of Florida, or even in the gulf frontage of Texas. Study peculiar plant needs and meet them so far as you can.—Los Angeles Times.

Fire Protection

Next to death, nothing is more certain than fire. That is why the portions of the building most vulnerable to fire—the basement ceiling over the heating plant and fuel room, the partitions around the stairwell and the construction around chimney breast—should be plastered on metal lath. Recent underwriters laboratories test resulted in this contruction being accorded a full one-hour rating. This leaves ample time for summoning fire apparatus and the fire can be extinguished with minimum property loss. —New York Herald-Tribune.

Best Town in Alabama

Where is the best town in Alabama? It is the town where all the people are working together to accomplish what is best for one and best for all. It is in that kind of community that progressive people want to make their home. If Oneonta isn't that town, let's know the reason why and make it the best town in Alabama.—Oneonta Southern Democrat. Yes, Talladega is a hard competitor!—Talladega (Ala.) Home.

Garden Furniture

Outdoor furniture adds greatly to the attractiveness of the garden.

There is something so homelike and unpretentious about wood that this material is the most natural choice for outdoor furnishings.

The greatest danger in the selection of it is the tendency to overcrowding. A few bits of garden furniture, kept well covered with paint of a suitable color, will add charm to any well arranged yard. Each piece must have a logical reason for being placed where it is.

ELP FOR MOTHERS OF AILING DAUGHTERS

Quigg and Mrs. Betton Tell in the Following Letters What Is Best To Do

DAUGHTER OF MRS. QUIGG
210 MAIN STREET, ROYERSFORD, PA.

Royersford, Pa. — "My daughter was sickly from the time she was 13 years old, and when she was 15 she was irregular and also had severe headaches and pains in her sides and back. She was this way about six months before I began giving her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regularly although she had tried it before. It helped her very much. She is not bothered by headaches, backaches, or cramps any more, and has not missed but one days work. I recommend it to other mothers with girls who have these troubles." —Mrs. QUIGG, 210 Main Street, Royersford, Pa.

Mrs. Betton's Letter

Ridgely, Md.—"I want to tell you how much good your Vegetable Compound has done my daughter. Before she started taking your medicine she was in a nervous, run-down condition, so that she could hardly sleep at night. She always had a pain in her side and sometimes cramps so that she would have to go to bed. She is a schoolgirl and was going to school only half the time because she was so weak and run-down she could not stand it to walk there some days. She was this way for three or four years. She had been reading your advertisements in the different newspapers and she noticed that some of the girls and women had suffered just as she had. So she took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and is a lot better. With the first bottle everybody could see a big change. She can go to school every day and can eat just as much as any one else, when before she did not have any appetite. We have told others about the medicine, and we are perfectly willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial. We are also willing to answer letters from other women concerning the help my daughter has received from the Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. JOSEPH BETTON, Ridgely, Maryland.

Building Sets Record

During the past three years there has been expended for new building in the United States somewhere between $14,000,000,000 and $16,000,000,000, and the year 1924 has seen a larger amount expended for building than any previous year.

Glass made by the early Romans contained so much iron that they could not see through their windows clearly.

ENSEMBLE SUIT FOR EASTER; MILLINERY OF DRESSIER TYPE

IT WILL not be necessary, milady, to check your hat and wrap this season, no matter how big the crush at the function you are attending. You can even leave your wrap in the taxi from which you so hastily departed under stress of keeping a pressing engagement, without, in order to recover it, going through a tedious process of proving ownership. You will not have gone far, when, most likely, someone will tap you on the shoulder saying, "Lady, here is your coat; I knew it was yours, for it matches the goods of your dress, and has the same linings, colorings and trimmings." Of course, this is assuming you are wearing an ensemble costume, for the vogue swering definitely in the "Easter bonnet," which comes to us this year as ornate as handicraft, flowers, ribbons and feathers can fashion it. Judging from the way embroidery and deft stitchery are lavished on many of the newer models, designers have come to the conclusion that to spare the needle spoils the hat. At any rate, it is the consensus of opinion among millinery stylists that the minus-trimming hats have run their course of popularity, and from now on our chapeaux are to be of the dressier type.

To make good their word, those artists abroad and at home who originate our styles in headwear are simply lavishing flowers on the new spring has literally taken possession of the field of fashion. In regard to style, there is one rule supreme to keep in mind—everything must match. Even our hats, shoes and accessories are being developed in accordance with the ensemble theme.

The smartest ensemble costumes are featured with fur, buttons and flare. It is these very style elements which contribute so definitely to the chic and charm of the ensemble model in the picture. The coat dares to flare decidedly and this at once definitely bespeaks the "very latest." The deep band of beige fox fur expresses the dernier cri for spring wraps. Tiny buttons arranged in a single prim row adorn the front of many a frock and tunic this season, just as the illustration shows. The chosen material for this ensemble is charmeen in a fetching golden oak shade. Braid on the collar and cuffs adds a dash of color.

Speaking of colors, such alluring shades as blond, beige, gray and amber are favored for Easter costumes, these glorified with harmonizing fur on the coat. Just now all the world of fashion is exploiting moonstone gray, following the lead of Mrs. Coolidge, whose costume of that subtle shade was one of the most important news items flashed to the world at large in connection with the inauguration of our President.

To trim or not to trim that is the question which milliners are answering definitely in the "Easter bonnet," which comes to us this year as ornate as handicraft, flowers, ribbons and feathers can fashion it. Judging from the way embroidery and deft stitchery are lavished on many of the newer models, designers have come to the conclusion that to spare the needle spoils the hat. At any rate, it is the consensus of opinion among millinery stylists that the minus-trimming hats have run their course of popularity, and from now on our chapeaux are to be of the dressier type.

To make good their word, those artists abroad and at home who originate our styles in headwear are simply lavishing flowers on the new spring models. Crowns of cunning cloches—and by the way the cloche is still a leading number—are simply smothered in a carpet of spring posies, a sight as refreshing as greets the eye in nature's own flower garden. Perhaps the most interesting innovation is the top-crown placement of flowers. Small hats with novelty crowns seem to have coaxed flowers of every description to climb to the tip-top crest of the crown, and there pose in perky pompons, or motifs arranged by deft fingers.

If not flowers then handwork enriches the new millinery. All-over hand embroidery combines with straw to produce a very spring-like touch.

Easter Millinery.

Straw tape is used on the hat shown first in the millinery group here pictured, in connection with elaborate floral embroidery.

Fine needlework features the strictly handmade georgette cloche to the right. Moonstone gray is the color of the crepe which is shirred over the crown and is self-trimmed with a huge circular buckle, handmade, and so placed as to clasp the long scarf.

The large apple-green timbo straw cloche to the right is semi-covered with handwrought sweet peas, using variegated silks in their composition and there are spreading leaves in solid embroidery which conceal the crown.

Handcraft finds expression in two instances on the last hat shown. First, the crown is composed of ribbon, basket woven; this is encircled at the headline with a band of roses made out of millinery folded faille silk

Where Nation's Milk Ends

FACTORIES absorb over 34 per cent of the American dairy cow's yearly milk production. More than three-fourths of this amount is turned out as creamery butter, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The amount of milk used as creamery butter is steadily increasing. To supply the demand of creameries in 1922 required seven billion pounds more than were used in 1914.

Cheese factories are the smallest unit of manufacture of any branch of the dairy industry. Only 3.7 per cent of the annual milk production is made into cheese.

There was a tremendous boom in the condensed milk industry during the European war. By 1919 the volume of exports totaled 40 per cent of the total manufacture. This was an increase of 5,100 per cent over prewar years. In 1920 exports were cut in half. This, with a 17 per cent shrink in domestic consumption, caused a sharp reduction of manufacture. Since 1920, however, condensed milk consumption has again doubled and the export trade is steadily improving. Nearly 90 per cent of the condensed milk made is manufactured in eight states—Wisconsin, New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Washington and California.

POISON GETS GARDEN PESTS

Striped Cucumber Beetle Doesn't Thrive on This Mixture

Striped cucumber beetles, the most destructive pests of cucumbers, melons, squashes and other vine plants, are readily controlled by dusting the young plant with a mixture of one part of calcium arsenate and 20 parts of gypsum, according to Dr. W. J. Drake, state entomologist, Iowa State College.

Dust the young plants when they first come up and follow with two or three applications each week and also after every rain. Ten to 12 applications during the season will usually hold the beetles in check.

The dust may be applied with a duster made by punching holes in the bottom of a small can with an ordinary penny nail, or may be simply scattered by hand. Circular no 90 which describes in detail the cucumber and melon insects, gives control methods for each, and being revised and may be secured on request from the Agricultural Experiment Station, Bulletin Section, Iowa State College, Ames.

BILLY SUNDAY TO BE AT MASON CITY

A huge clock is being installed in the tower of the court house atFor-City. The clock has four faces and will be electrically illuminated at night. The clock will strike the hour and half hour periods.

ORCHARD SPRAY TIME IS HERE

May Be Applied Any Time During Spring—Three Kinds of Scale Need Control

Orchards infested with scale need to be given the dormant spray. This may be applied any time during the spring until the leaves are about one half inch long on the bud tips, according to Dr. B. B. Fulton, entomology specialist, Iowa State College. Three kinds of scale are common in Iowa, San Jose scale oyster shell and scurfy. The same control methods apply to all.

Lime sulfur is the safest spray to use. Commercial lime sulphur with a specific gravity of about 1.28, or which tests 32 degrees Beaume, should be used at a dilution of one to eight. Home made mixtures are usually not so concentrated and msst be diluted accordingly. Good miscible oils are effective for killing scales, but must not be used until all danger of freezing is past and must be carefully used in order to be safe. Oil spray cannot be mixed with lime sulphur.

If the dormant spray is not used until the leaves start growth, lead arsenate may be included in the spray mixture at the rate of two pounds to 100 gallons. This is to kill the first of the bud moths and leaf rollers. Lead arsente may be added to either oil or sulphur, and if the latter is used, three fourths pint of 40 per cent nicotine sulphur may be added to kill aphids, if they are troublesome.

TEST 100 FLOWERS FOR IOWA

Iowa State College Tries out More Than 100 Varieties of Flowers

Extensive trials have been carried on in the experimental gradens at Iowa State College during the past three years show which of the annual flowering plants are best suited for Iowa conditions. Nearly a hundred varieties, including all types of flowering plants were studied. E. C Voltz, floriculture specialist, reccomends the following varieties, many of which are now in common use, as being well adapted to this state.

Climbing plants—cup and saucer, wild cucumber, cypress, comman and Jananese morning glories and scarlet runner bean.

Trailing plants for window boxes or hanging baskets — thumbergia or blue-eyed Susan and climbing nasturtium.

Dwarf annuals, 15 to 18 inches high, for endging low beds and borders—ageratun, nemophila or baby-blue-eye, Swan River daisy, calendula, Chinese or annual pinks, pansy, dwarf petunna, annual phlox, Port Ulaca, san vitalia, sweet lyssum (little gem variety.) verbena, French marigold and California poppy.

The best annuals of medium height 18 to 24 inches, are snap dragon, arctosis or white African daisy, gypphila, elegans or annual baby's breath, balsam, annual gailradia, centaurea cyanus or corn flower, calliopsis or annual creopsis, coxcomb, summer cypress or burning bush, euphorbia marginata or snow-on themountain, euphorbia heterophylla or annual poinsettia, for o'clock, amaranthus or princess' feather, mourning bride or scabiossa, flowering tobacco, poppies salvia or scarlet sage, African marigold, Chinese wool flower and zinia.

Tall annuals, three to six feet, for Iowa, are caster bean, cleone or spider plant, cosmos, datura, or horn of plenty, annual hollyhock, annual sun flower, and cucumber-leaved hunflower.

STATE DECLAMATORY TO BE BROADCASTED

This year, for the first time inIowa and perhaps for the first time in the world, a High School Declamatory Contest is to be broadcasted. The annual state contest will be held this year in Atlantic, on the evening of Friday, April 10. Such programs usually begin at 8 o'clock. High schools having radio facilities should make much of this opportunity, and in all high schools announcement should be made of the plan and students urged to "listen in."

JUDGING TEAM GOES TO EUROPE

Junior Dairy Judging Team from Franklin County to Represent U. S.

Hampton, Iowa, Apr. 8,—The Iowa Legislature has brought happiness to the Champion Junior Dairy Judging Team from Franklin County, Iowa, by appropriating $4000 to pay their expenses to the International Judging Contest at London so that they could represent Iowa and the United States at the International contest.

These three boys, Harlan Leonard Lester Olhon and Raymond Monahan, competed with other judging teams for the Iowa championship Waterloo. After winning that, they went to Milwaukee and won the National championship.

This is the first time that Iowa boys have won the national championship and a great deal of credit is due to the splendid coaching which they received from V. B. Hamilton, the county agent from Franklin county.

The proposal to send the team to Europe received the support of M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture, N. E. Kendall, former Governor, John Hammill, Governor, and practically all of the farm organizations of the state.

PHEASANTS CAN BE CAPTURED IN WINNEBAGO COUNTY

Forest City Republican—A petition has been filed with the state game department certifying that pheasants have been damaging and destroying crops in this vicinity and requesting the permission of this department for the capture of these birds. This permission has been granted and the dates are set for April 4 to 23, 1925, inclusive, in which these birds may be taken alive and delivered to warden. Theo. Bauer, at Forest City. A bounty of $1.00 will be paid for each pheasant

W. E. Albert, state game warden, states that a number of requests have come to his office to permit the killing of these birds, but that it is the opinion of the department that if an honest effort is made to capture them that the desired relief will be secured and their numbers can be reduced to a point where they are no longer a menace to agriculture. The birds that are captured will be distributed to the other parts of the state where they are not so numerous or where hey are not considered a nuisance.

Following instructions, the nephews discovered a tin treasure chest hidden in rubbish and straw a the barn manger. A check of its contents gave $6,000 in currency and $4,000 in promisory notes. The money was deposited in a Bedford bank, the frst banking business transacted by or for Mr. Tame for many years.

FARMERS HURT BUTTER TRADE

Eating of Oleomargarine Responsible for Slump in Butter Prices

Better co-operation and wiser purchasing economy on the part of the farmers themselves would have averted the present decline in dairy profits by preventing the accumulation of a butter surplus, in the opinion of M. Mortensen, chief in dairy, Iowa State College. If farmers thruout the country had eaten butter producer by American dairymen, he points out, instead of cheaper and less nutritious oleomargarine, for for which much of the raw material is gathered by the natives of South Sea islands, no butter surplus would exist today.

During 1924 about 60,000,000 pounds more of butter were in cold storage than in the previous year. Farmers last year purchased nearly 60,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine The decline in butter prices, due to the surplus amounted on the average to 4.22 cents per pound in 1924 as compared to 1923. For the 1350 million pounds of butter produced last year this represents a total decrease in value of about 57 million dollars.

The difference between the cost of the 60,000,000 pounds of oleomargine which farmers bought and what 60,000,000 pounds of butter would have cost, amounted to about $6,000 000. Farmers in saving $6,000,000 on oleomargine lost $57,000,000 on butter.

WASH HOSE SCIENTIFICALLY

Silk stockings are the highbrows of the family wash—they want to be washed alone. This is what the girls in the home equipment classes at Iowa State College have learned in washing their own hose. The method of washing silk hose, which through test has been found to be most satisfactory is:

Don't wash silk stocking with any other clothes—what's good for the rest may be death for the stockings.

Never soak them.

Wash them as quickly as possible in warm water with good white soap and rinse thoroly in good clear water.

Then put them in a coarse towel and squeeze them as dry as possible before hanging up.

Do not hang them in the sun.

Do not iron them.

IOWA SETS RECORD IN T B ERADICATION

Des Moines, Iowa, April 8,—Iowa has just completed a new record in the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, by testing a total of 130,297 cattle during the month of March, according to the summary completed by the Iowa Department of Agriculture. The nearest approach to this record was also made by Iowa in February, when 121,736 cattle were tested. No other state in the union has tested over 100,000 in any one month.

Pottawattamie and Jasper counties have also been declared as modified accredited countieh. This makes four counties in Iowa which have reduced the tuberculoss in their cattle to less than one-half of one per cent. The other counties are Winnbago and Wapello. All of these counties get ten cents per hundred extra on their hogs on account of being free of tuberculosis.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

34 PERCENT OF IOWA SEED CORN IS WORTHLESS

According to Extensive Tests Made by Seed Corn Show Expert

Only 66 percent of the seed corn in the cribs of the Iowa farmers this year is fit for use, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The figure is based on germination test of seed corn from 943 farms in 96 counties of the state that were entered in the National Corn Show held in Chicago last week

Fully 34 per cent of the Iowa seed corn tested showed poor germination according to J. S. Naylor, the expert in charge of the testing. Presumably they are the best ears that these farmers could find, and yet this large percentage of them will not grow when planted. Unless farmers test the seed corn before planting time, there will be a prodigious amount of replanting necessary. Testing now will prevent an absolute shortage at harvest time, he says.

"The big lesson of the National Seed Corn Show can be learned by each Iowa corn grower in his own crib," says Mr. Naylor. "Take the dozen best ears. Then take the dozen poorest ears. Each dozen ears will plant an acre of ground. The land is the same, the work is the same. Same weather. Same overhead. Same cost. At the end of the season the best dozen ears will yield perhaps 43 bushels of corn on the acre the poorest dozen ears will yield 21 bushels. The 12 best ears will yield twice the crop of the poor ears. This is the lesson that every farmer should take to heart."

The Iowa state sweepstakes of the National Seed Corn Show was won by Earnest Parson, of Mitchellsville, Polk County, but he was later defeated for the national championship by Mrs. Elsie M. Paluska, of Waverly Ill., whose entry was awarded the thousand dollar C. M. Kittle trophy, the big prize of the show.

THIS HEN STORES HER EGGS

Therefore Veterinary Surgeon Does Removal Operation

During the past few months a number of hens have been received by the Veterinary Division, Iowa State College, for surgical operations for the removal of eggs which had passed from the normal tract into the body cavity.

A recent visitor at the veterinary hospital was a high producing White Leghorn biddy with a record of more than 250 eggs per year. In this hen were three fully developed eggs, two of them with shells and the other only by a membrane all lying loose in the abdomen.

A surgeon performed an operation and removed the eggs, after which the hen was able to be returned to the flock, where she is now laying eggs as efficiently as before.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

CARLSON RENDERED SERVICE IN RUSSIA

After the breakdown of the Russian government in 1918, the allies in the World war were confronted with a very serious threat. The Russian people were in distress. German prisoners of war were pushing intrigues of every sort. To meet the danger, the allies decided to send an expeditionary force to occupy the port of Archangel in north Russia, in order to prevent the Germans from using it as a submarine base and to guard allied supplies.

Among the first United States troops sent to Archangel was the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth infantry. In the little American force there were 553 casualties, of whom 109 were killed in action. After the armistice it was found impossible to remove the detachment because of climatic conditions, which prevented movements of large bodies of troops or large amounts of supplies.

One of the officers in the Three Hundred and Thirty-ninth infantry was First Lieut. Albert B. Carlson, now department commander of the North Dakota department of the American Legion. Commander Carlson took part in the battles of Preluk, Chekuva, Turhiskaya and Oberskaya and in the retreat from Pacepelda. He was wounded once in that nightmare campaign in the snows of the far north.

Commander Carlson, who is now assistant manager of the Minot Wholesale Grocery company, entered the service in June, 1917, and was discharged in September two years later. He was awarded the St. Stanislas cross (Russian) and the English Military cross.

As chairman of the American Legion's state legislative committee in 1920 he was largely instrumental in securing the passage of a state compensation measure for World war veterans, a bill making Armistice day a legal holiday and another prohibiting the illegal wearing of the American Legion button. Commander Carlson was himself a member of the legislature that session. He is a member of William G. Carroll post, No. 26, at Minot and was its commander in 1923.

Install Radio Outfits in Veteran's Hospitals

All Veterans' Bureau hospitals are being equipped with radio outfits, according to information received recently by rehabilitation officers of the American Legion from Director Frank T. Hines of the bureau. The Legion has been urging this step for some time.

In 47 hospitals operated by the bureau radio has been installed or the equipment will be completed shortly.

Experiments already made prove that the radio is a highly valuable adjunct to hospital equipment. It is without doubt the most adaptable and popular of recreational facilities now provided for the disabled. The therapeutic qualities are considered to be as valuable as the recreational qualities. One important feature of this form of entertainment is that a patient may listen in or not as he himself feels inclined.

Rev. Father Bellamy Is to Succeed Doctor Clark

There is a story behind the appointment of Rev. Father Bellamy as state chaplain of the New York department of the American Legion, to succeed Dr. J. A. Clark of Oneonta, who resigned because of ill health.

Father Bellamy, through his activities, was one of those in line for election as chaplain at the state convention last year. His election was looked for by many, but he had a different idea. He worked actively for the selection of Doctor Clark and nominated him for the office. Religious lines were forgotten—a Catholic stepped aside and worked for the appointment of a Protestant. It was this that state officers considered in electing a successor to Doctor Clark, they said.

Community Building

Cogent Reasons Why One Should Own Home

"Home owners are the builders and principal supporters of our churches. You seldom see a new church being built in a neighborhood of apartments and rooming houses. The churches that are already there rely for their support chiefly upon endowments, or the generosity of people who have long since left the neighborhood.

"With the approaching years the need of a permanent home becomes more apparent," a Detroit realtor pointed out recently in a radio broadcast. "Age does not readily lend itself to change. The desire for undisturbed repose and assurance of shelter increases with the passing years. In mature years one does not become accustomed to new surroundings as readily as in youth.

"Any man who is everlastingly chasing rainbows, inventing excuses, and does not attempt to provide his family with a home isn't fit to be the head of his household. He should stand aside and let his wife or someone else fulfill his obligations.

"I realize that my thoughts tonight have been following a serious vein and that the radio is more commonly used for jazz than to inspire meditation. However, the Detroit couple, or in fact that couple in any progressive American city, who do not own their home will soon be confronted with a very serious problem. The country is growing with extreme rapidity and prices have a tendency to increase with growth.

"This more especially applies to desirable locations. If you have not already started on the road to home ownership let this year mark your beginning, even though the actual beginning be nothing more than asking how or where to start."

Bright, Orderly Village Attractive to Buyers

In every town there should be some intelligent supervision. And this should be much more easily obtained than in a city. In villages the interests are peculiarly common to all. What benefits one in some measure benefits everyone. It should be easy to establish a policy of co-operation. There would be certain standards to be sought; certain things to be prohibited. Ugliness would be abolished by common consent. Order should be the rule and habit. Leadership would be needed, but there is leadership, potential or active, in every community.

Whatever would make the villages brighter and more orderly would make them more attractive to the buyer, to the traveler and to the homeseeker.

A village is more than a mere community; it is a community center. It can afford recreation for its own and for those it seeks to interest in its business or its affairs, for the farmers and their families, who need entertainment and diversion in their busy lives.—Kansas City Star.

Attracting Industries

A prosperous industry in any community is one of the most attractive invitations to other industries. Far-sighted men seeking locations for manufacturing enterprises are impressed with the success of other enterprises which have preceded them in the field under contemplation. One profitable industry often does more to attract others than the combined efforts of civic organizations and community boosters. An industry which is on its last legs not only contributes nothing directly to the good of a community, but indirectly injures it by warning prospective investors not to come. Every community wants bigger payrolls, but it is not always necessary to bring in new concerns in order to achieve that end.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Have a Home if Possible

No family can ever feel for a rented house that deep-seated affection which is naturally developed for a home they own. There is little incentive to adorn and beautify the house and the yard which belong to another. But when the place that shelters the family group is their own every added beauty, every tree and shrub and flower planted, adds new charm to life and strengthens the ties that bind the happy hearts.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Business Text

"The kind of booster we like," says the Tifton Gazette, "is the one who spends his money at home. Boosting by word of mouth is fine, and it helps, but boosting business by trading at home is even better. Be selfish enough to spend your money where you will have a chance to get it back."

Civic Pride Contagious

Did you ever notice how contagious is the spirit of civic pride, which causes our citizens to keep neat, clean, attractive yards? an exchange asks. Other citizens up and down the street catch the spirit and soon the whole street presents an attractive appearance.

SICK WOMEN ATTENTION!

Read this Remarkable Testimony Regarding Results from Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Norfolk, Virginia.—"If you only knew how many women and girls have taken your medicine by hearing my testimony, it would seem wonderful to you. Every day and every chance I have I advise some one to try it. It was in June, 1904, when I had given up to never get well, that I wrote to you. My husband went to the drug-store and brought the Vegetable Compound home to me. In a few days I began to improve and I have often taken it since. I am now passing through the Change of Life and still stick by it and am enjoying wonderful health. When I first started with your medicines I was a mere shadow. My health seemed to be gone. The last doctor I had said he would give me no more local treatments unless I went to the Hospital and was operated on. That was when I gave the doctors up. Now I am a healthy robust woman. I wish I could tell the world what a wonderful medicine Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is. I will be only too glad to answer letters from anywhere. I wish all sick women would take it."—Mrs. J. A. JONES, 317 Colley Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia.

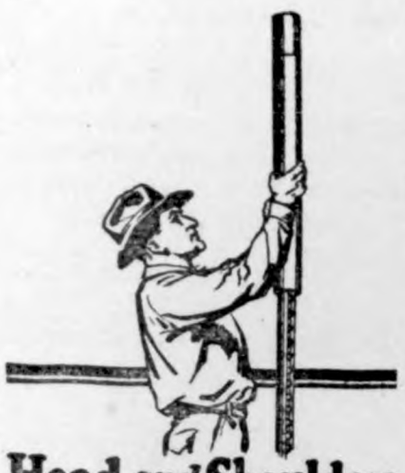
Soothing and Healing For Cuts, Burns, Scalds



Head and Shoulders Above all Others

IT'S been our experience that a line of goods which outsells all others has some pretty good reasons for becoming the leader.

In steel fence posts for instance, the make that is head and shoulders above the others in sales is the Red Top. Here's the answer: The Red Top Studded Tee is an extra strong, reinforced post, very durable and of finer appearance. It is easy and cheap to set and fasten fencing to, therefore making even its original cost in the fence line very reasonable.

With the One-Man Driver one man can drive 200 to 300 Red Tops in a day. Once in the ground they stay put, keeping stock, yours and your neighbors', where it belongs. Red Tops do away with frequent post replacements and fence repairs. They outlast two wood posts.

You Get These 4 Big Features in Red Tops

Studded Reinforcing Rib Full Length of Post

1 A steel reinforcing rib runs the full length of this post, making it much stronger by actual test than other types. Improvements in design do away with all punching of holes in the post.

Anchor Plate Attached Without Rivets or Holes in Post

2 The Red Top is not weakened at this vital point by punching holes in the post. The sturdy anchor plate is permanently united to the post by spreading the heads of two of the studs.

Handy Fasteners With the Long Leg

3 The long leg on the patented Red Top Fastener wraps all the way around the stem of the post and permanently holds the wire in place. It never loosens up. One man attaches fencing to posts with this fastener.

Pure Aluminum Metallic Finish—Baked-on

4 This double duty finish adds extra years to the life of the post by protecting the steel. Red Tops with the Aluminum finish make neat, attractive fences, that you will be proud of.

We have a good stock on hand. Come in and see us about your needs.

SOUND PRINCIPLES FOR ALLIED DEBTS

Payments to America Should Be Guided by Dawes Plan, Says C. E. Mitchell.

The fundamental principles of the Dawes plan for settling the European war debt question are applicable to the problem of the Allied debts to the United States, Charles E. Mitchell, president of the National City Bank of New York, declares in an article in the American Bankers Association Journal. Mr. Mitchell says:

"Debts between nations are always a source of international trouble, and I consider it of great importance that our own economic as well as political relations with such countries as France, Belgium and Italy may be improved by an early adjustment of their debts to our own national government.

Country Endorsed Dawes Plan

"I hope that we are gradually learning that such debts, if unduly forced, may result more calamitously to the commercial interests of our own country than to those of the debter country. This talk of forcing payment of 'every dollar to the last penny,' is commercially unwise. I think we may assume that the Dawes plan has had the indorsement of the American people through their election of General Dawes to the Vice Presidency of the United States. That plan is one that establishes fundamental principles which may be applied in considering the debts of one nation to another resulting from war.

"The first principle, as I see it, is that the yoke of the war debt shall not be held as a burden upon the people beyond the generation that had to do with the war. This principle is clearly intimated in the fact that the industrial and railway debentures which form the principal security and means of payment of the debt carry 5 per cent interest with 1 per cent amortization, which means that such obligations are to be over a period of about thirty-six years.

An Invitation to Trouble

"Any attempt to force the carrying of such debt burdens to the second and third generations is but an engraved invitation to further trouble.

"The second principle is that the debtor country shall be taxed to the limit while the debt remains, but in no event to a point where its economic structure collapses under the strain, and, further, that the nationals of the debtor country shall in no case have a lesser burden of taxation upon them than have the nationals of the creditor country—another principle the soundness of which cannot be questioned.

"The third principle is that with such taxes collected, payments therefrom shall be made to the creditor country to such an extent only as they can be made without disrupting international exchange and commerce. The soundness of this last is apparent on its face.

"These I regard as the fundamental principles of the Dawes plan, and all of the hundreds of pages of the so-called Dawes report are devoted to setting up the machinery by which these principles can be put into effect.

"If these principles are accepted as sound then they must also be sound principles by which the payment of the debts of allied countries to us shall be determined, and we would best apply such a yardstick as our measure, rather than attempt to make popular the slogan of 'every dollar to the last penny.' In the adjustment of our foreign relations, essential to the development of increased export and import trade, there can be no problem of greater importance than reaching a sound and final conclusion as to this irritating question of the debts of allied countries to ourselves."

ADVERSITY A STIMULANT TO GOOD FARMING

An interesting experience is told by Dean Dodson of a Louisiana farmer who was just about breaking even in growing cotton. One day his wife fell seriously ill and was obliged to go to the hospital. A little later his daughter was also taken to the hospital. Before he was through with this experience he was confronted with a bill for $3,200. What was he to do?

Like a good business man he began to figure how he might increase his income and cut down his expenses. He had a few cows that he kept for raising calves. He started to milk these and sell the product. He had some cull potatoes that were unsalable. He fed these to his cows and some pigs which he was able to buy right. Other waste products were utilized in the same manner. In the garden he had more turnips than he needed for his own use. These he sorted, selling the best and feeding the poor ones. He consulted with his merchants as to what garden crops he might profitably grow for the local market.

He figured that he had some idle land that he might use in growing grain and hay. He enlarged his flock of poultry and took better care of it. He was more careful in the use of his auto and saved a considerable sum that ordinarily went for gasoline. By taking advantage of the increased sources of income and by cutting out unnecessary expenses he was able by the end of the year to pay off his hospital bill, and in the meantime had discovered the secret of sound and successful farming.—Banker-Farmer

Put Naturalist Down as "Poor Innocent"

The patient devotion of the naturalist to observations that seem to the ignorant onlooker trifling and meaningless often creates in the minds of those onlookers a reasonable doubt of the scientific man's sanity. In the "Human Side of Fabre," by Mr. P. F. Bicknell, there is an amusing incident in point that the great French naturalist was himself fond of relating.

Ever since daybreak, he says, I had been sitting in watchful waiting on a stone at the bottom of a ravine. The digger wasp of Languedoc was the subject of my morning's study. Three women, grape-pickers, passed me on their way to the vineyards. Glancing at the man sitting there apparently lost in thought, they gave him a polite good morning, which he as politely returned. At sunset the same three grape-pickers passed again on their homeward way with their heaped-up baskets on their heads. The man was still there, sitting on the same stone; his eyes were turned upon the same spot.

My immobile attitude and my long-continued station on the one spot all alone must have struck them as something extraordinary. As they passed me I saw one of them touch her forehead with her finger, and I heard her whisper to the others in their patois: "A poor innocent. Oh, poor man!"

Then they all three crossed themselves.

An innocent she had called me, an innocent—that is, an idiot, a poor devil, harmless but bereft of his reason—and they had all three made the sign of the cross, for in their eyes an idiot was marked with the seal of God.—Youth's Companion.

Persian Rug Classed as Work of Real Art

A truly unique piece of oriental work is Persia's wonderful "Coronation" rug. It embraces a pictorial record of Persia's rulers from times antedating the Christian era to the time of the World war. Work upon the rug was started in 1906 and went on until it was completed. It was to have glorified the crowning of the sultan Ahmed Mirza, on the occasion of his expected ascension to the throne of Persia, but was diverted mysteriously to New York. Moving like the enchanted carpet, it was spirited 6,000 miles to that modern Bagdad. The rug is a multicolored one, is 16 feet long by 11 feet wide, and was specially woven during the period of 17 years, being the handiwork of the 27 most famous rug makers then living in Persia. With remarkable fidelity to features and absolute verity to costume of the time of each individual depicted, this rug represents the portrait of 160 of Persia's great kings, or shahs, and is otherwise highly decorated. There are 1,000 knots to each square inch, or about 25,300,000 knots tied to the linen warp threads to produce the wool nap that forms the velvety body and creates the portrait and decorative features.

A man ran away with the wife of a neighbor. The local clergyman called upon the deserted husband to attempt to console him, but the man seemed singularly cheerful considering the nature of his loss.

"It's too bad; too bad!" said the clergyman. "I understand that the man who persuaded your wife to elope with him was your best friend."

The husband smiled.

"Yes," he said, "he was—and he is!"

FORCING LOWER TAXES

Gerard B. Winston, Undersecretary of the Treasury in the American Bankers Association Journal says, "The burden of taxes must be lightened. Per capita Federal taxes rose from $32 in 1918 to $54 in 1920; then commenced to drop, and have been successively $45, $32, $28, $29 in the last four fiscal years. It is estimated that for the next fiscal year the figure will be about $27. With the states and municipalities the opposite tendency is disclosed. In 1918 their per capita tax was something over $20. In the next four years it rose to $27, $30, $36, $38, and later figures will undoubtedly show further increases."

He says of excessive death taxes that "examples have been cited of how the states and Federal government, under existing laws, can take more than 100 per cent of an estate. If Federal and state governments take more than the particular source of taxation can stand, it will ultimately destroy all revenue from that source. After a man has provided for the reasonable requirements of living, the impetus to further production is largely the desire to leave one's family well provided for. So long as the individual feels that he can pay the tax and still leave an estate to his family, he will increase his efforts; but a man will not seek to build up a large fortune just to have it taken away from his family at his death."

STORE CREDIT COSTS 26 PER CENT.

In a survey of 800 farms made by the North Carolina Experiment Station, it was found that over 40 per cent of the total credit needs for the farmer is for short term loans, either through the bank or through merchant advances. Only one-sixth of this amount comes from banks and the rest from stores or landlords. For store credit farmers are paying over 26 per cent interest, and only a little better than half of the farmers realized this fact. The bank rate of interest at the same time was only a trifle above 6 per cent. Practically all merchants would be delighted to go over to a cash basis.

The remedy lies in the production of more food and feed and in the discontinuance of shipping in hay and grain with their attendant high freight rates and dealers' profits. This means the establishment of better working relations between bankers and farmers, for there is great opportunity for educating the farmer along the line of bank credit.—Banker-Farmer.

UNDER NATURAL LAWS

Great changes are occurring in the agricultural situation. Gloom and grouch are giving way to renewed hope. We all rejoice that this is happening. It is being brought about through the immutable and inexorable natural laws. It is as difficult to legislate prosperity as to attempt by law to make folks honest. Agriculture in the last analysis operates under about the same basic laws as any other business.—P. B. Doty, Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association.

IOWA WILL PROSPER IF WE "LEARN TO BE FAIR"

Iowa needs population, factories, productive industry and capital. We need fair opportunities for the growth and prosperity of business enterprises. We need opportunities for ambitious boys and girls to engage in other occupations than farming. We need lower interest rates and less agitation. The people of Iowa are too much engaged in trying to take money away from one another and not enough in trying to build something that will produce wealth and opportunity for furthur developement. Instead of making war on capital we ought to be inviting it into the state to be invested in facories, public utiltes, farm lands etc.. with the assurance that it will be fairly treated and really appreced. Iowa will prosper when we learn to be constructive and fair instead of destructive and unfair.—Knoxville Journal.

MAY KEEP CONCORD CAMP GROUNDS

A few weeks ago, the camp grounds at old concord were advertised for sale in the columns of the Garner papers. This fact aroused our people to the possibility of the grounds and tabernacle which is on the grounds as a permanent building, and something along the line of attempting to buy the place may develop. We have heard several people express themselves as being willing to help finance the purchase of the place. Surely the tabernacle should not be torn down as i is a very desirable building in which to house large gatherings. —Garner Leader.

BLACK LEG IN MARTIN COUNTY

The Fairmon Sentinel says there is blackleg in Iowa and that the disease has spread cross the line into Minnesota. All this is news to the people on this side of the line. There have been no cases of the disease in this locality and we're hoping that none show up. Here in the Sentinel story.

Blackleg, a dreaded cattle plague which has been killing stock in northern Iowa, has appeared on the Minnesota side of the line in Martin county. Joe Buchan, on the C. N. Peterson Minneiowa farm, reported today that he had lost five head of white faced steers and two more expected to die.

Mr. Buchan has had his herd vaccinated by an Iowa Veterinarian and thinks he will not lose any more. He advised any farmer who observes his cattle stiffening in the forelegs to call a veterinarian and begn vccinating at once.

Blckleg has been quite prevalent in the neighborhood of Swea City, Mr. Buchan stated and in many parts of Kossuth and Emmet counties.—Ringsted Dispatch.

BARNUM WAS RIGHT!

A smooth appearing guy hit Jefferson one day last week and his business was to sell advertising cards for the Carroll-Des Moines bus line It is reported he told business men there were to be 500 copies issued. After he had collected $5 a piece in advance from space takers, he cashed their checques at a local filling station and left for parts unknown. A phone message from Carroll made inquiry for m the part of business men there, who found that, after promising them 500 cards, he had left orders for only 100 cards at the printing office. He did the same here, except he failed to complete his arrangements for the job, which he took to the Herald office. He had a price for 100 from Mr. Satter, but was to come back later and arrange to pay for the job. This formality he apparently overlooked, so his copy langushes at the Herald office, awaiting the proper shelling out of the mazuma. Business men here, who paid him by check, ordered payment stopped so the locl filling station is apt to be out for at least part of the money. However as an innocent purchases of the checks, it 's probable he will be reimbursed by each party concerned. In fact he should be. Each person who paid for this nice little piece of "graft" ought to settle, and charge the amount up o "experience.' —Jefferson Bee.

GIVES INSTUCTIONS ON HOW TO KILL OFF GOPHERS AND MOLES

Want to get rid of the ground hogs and moles on your property?

If you do, these troublesome rodents can be easily exterminated, according to Carl Kennedy, assistant secretary of the Iowa Agricultural department.

The poison as given off by calcium cynanide will kill them quickly. Just put the calcium cyanide into the holes, and the contact with the moisture releases the gas.

If you desire further information regarding this method, it may be obtained from the Iowa department at the stae house or from he Iowa Horticultural Society.

GOVERNOR'S FATHER DIES

George Hammill, father of Governor John Hammill, died at his home in Britt during the night last Thursday night. He was found dead in his bed Friday morning when neighbors went into the house. He had been at a neighbor's home until late in the evening before and was feeling as well as usual, or at least he made no complaint other wise. When he did not appear about the place Friday morning neighbors went to his home and found him. He was pa t 77 years of age, andhad lived in the neighborhood of Britt for many years. For many years he lived on a farm and later in town. He was active for man of his years and lived alone. The funeral was held Sunday and was largely attended —Garner Signal.

TRIO ATTEMPT TO REMOVE THREE STORY BUILDING

The "theft" of a three story brick building was thwarted in Detroit the other day when three men were arrested as involved in the larceny.

Carl Singer, owned the building which has not been occupied for some time. Passing the property yesterday, he observed three men industriously engaged in razing the building. The men told him they were employed by a nearby wrecking company, which denied all know ledge of the work.

The first two were charged with grand larceny and the third with receiving stolen property, as he was carrying the bricks away as the others tore them from the building.

Iowa land just simply can't be kept down. Our exchanges are continually reporting land sales with considerations that prove that farmers have confidence in the future of Iowa. Soren Didriksen, of Algona, recently purchased forty acres south east of Britt for $300 an acre and paid all cash. Over at West Bend, Joseph Schneider paid $300 per acre for an eighty. It is certainly encouraging to see these items in the papers from time to time and to know that times are realy getting better.

Anyone desiring information on the Citizen's Military Training camp for this summer should wrte G. A. Pemis, Gaier, Iowa. These camps are maintained at different points for the traning of men and boys between the age of 17 and 24. Railroad fare, uniforms, food, lodging, and medical and dental care are furnished to those attending these camps which re open for about thirty days.

Save on Your Gas and See the Scenery!

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President American Bankers Association.

William E. Knox

A long, long time ago, a very great teacher said, "Man shall not live by bread alone." That is true. A man who lives by bread alone and simply feeds his body will be nothing more than an animal. There is more than bread that goes to the making of a life. There are the things of the mind and the spirit, and we are all of us making a great mistake if we measure success in this world by material things. Material things are all right and ought to be emphasized to some extent, but they should not occupy more than their proper place in the scheme of things. Over and above and beyond them are the things of the intellect, and over and above those are the things of the spirit, the finer things of life. If, in reaching out for material prosperity, we forget those things, we may get the material prosperity, but we will not get true joy and true happiness out of life. I want to commend to every one that, in addition to striving for the good things of this life which are good in their way, to remember the other things also.

I promise you if you do that, it will not make any difference whether you get great rewards or not; it will not make any difference whether you arrive at high position or not. You will have instead a great inward satisfaction, and you will feel that you have lived a pretty good life and had a good time while you were doing it.

Have your good time as you go along. Don't be like the automobilists that go whizzing over the country at sixty miles an hour and arrive at their destinations at the end of the day's run not having seen the beauties of the country they went through; having seen nothing of the birds or the flowers, of the streams and the trees and the hills, but having just totaled up so many miles on snch an expenditure of gas. Save on your gas and enjoy the scenery as you go along through life. Just put that into operation—save on your gas and see more of the scenery!

Famous Group of Stars

The Pleiades is a group of small stars in the constellation Taurus, very conspicuous on winter evenings about 24 degrees north of the equator. For some unknown reason there were anciently said to be seven Pleiades, although only six were conspicuous then as now; hence the suggestion of a lost Pleiad. In mythology the Pleiades were said to be the daughters of Atlas and Pleione, and were named Alcyone, Merope, Celaeno, Electra, Sterope or Asterope, Taygeta and Maia.

We can't remember having read of a girl of 20 marrying a man of 60 who was poor.

EVERYWHERE you go everybody is figuring out a Cross Word Puzzle. Nobody is working or even exercising. America will lose the next War but win the Puzzle Contest. It's the greatest craze that hit this country since Prohibition. People say to me, "Why Will, you don't understand, it is an Education, it learns you more ways to say one word." If you know one way to say a word, what do you need to know any more for? Nobody is going to give you anything for nothing, I don't care how many ways you ask for it. Our nation has never been short on words. It might lack ideas sometime but never words. This puzzle has done one thing, it has learned us which is Horizontal and which is Vertical. But a Cross Word Puzzle is not new. Railroad Time Tables have been out for years. Smoke 'Bull' Durham while working one, that is, if you want to, if you don't, why smoke wherever you want to.

Louie Knoke and R. A. Jorgenson went up to Garner Monday morning in Knoke's truck and got there just as the fire siren sounded. They hooked onto the hose cart and hauled it to the fire at the Dad Kelly home. Only a small blaze and a few shots of chemical put it out. The Garner firemen wondered how we got there so quick.

Mrs. "Bill" Johnson received word from relatives at Joplin, Mo., that her brother had mysteriously dissapeared and it was feared that foul play had befallen him. He had sold out recently and he and his wife were planning to move to California. They were packing a trunk and needed some rope to tie it with and not having any he put on his coat, in which was $2850.00 in cash and went to town. That was last week Wednesday and no word has been heard of him since. Joplin is a coal mining town and it is feared that he might have been robbed and disposed of.

The Chas. Abraham & Sons store at Garner, which is the largest store in that city, is enjoying an immense business. Mr. Abraham, the owner, has two other fine stores; one at Lake Mills and one at Joice. The Abraham stores in each of those cities is also the largest. The store at Garner has an especially fine line of ladies ready-to-wear; in fact they carry as fine a line and vriety as any store in Mason City. A large line of men's and boy's clothing is also carried. Mr. Abraham is a very busy man as he does the buying for the three stores nd also over-sees the entire business.

Coming back rom Waterloo, via Mason City Sunday, we saw the place where a man and boy were killed one mile east of Nora Springs.

The man, about forty, and his eight year old son were struck in their car on a crossings by the Milwaukee westbound afternoon passenger and were carried for about 600 yards before the train could be stopped. They were instantly killed and were ground to pieces. The crossing apparently seemed to be a clear one and a train could esily be seen from both ways. It is another lesson to be careful when driving over a railroad crossing.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson entertained the members of the Recreation Club at a combination St. Patrick's nd April Fool party last week Thursday evening. The fore part of the evening was spent doing Irish stunts with plenty of April Fool jokes thrown in for good measure after which the usual 500 game was in progress. Everything went fine until time to serve lunch and the last course ready to serve and when Mrs. Jorgenson opened the brick ice cream the only thing in them was a big bloke of wood (pine flavor.) The "gang" had expected to be the "goats" at party stunts and they had engineered the fake ice cream deal with Druggist Wilson who handed "Jergie" some bricks that would sure keep. All had a fine time and each one had the satisfaction of getting off a good joke on the other fellow.

50 ACRES OF HOT WATER DISCOVERED

A second hot water lake, 50 acres in extent has been discovered in the Mount Baker national forest in northwest Washington, it was announced here recently by W J. Elliot prospector and explorer, who said he found it last summer. The other lake of hot water in the Mount Baker preserve is about 30 acres in size.

The new lake, Elliot said, is at an altitude of about 5,000 feet and he estimates the temperature of its waers a 112 degrees Fahrenheit. It is located in very rugged country to the east of Mount Baker.

Three hot spring have been located in the Mount Baker National forest.

SO POOR HE WASN'T ABLE TO JOIN THE ARMY

Poverty is a terrible thing to be sure.

Now comes the case of a man so poor that he can't even join the army for a "meal ticket."

Frank Ball, an emigrant from Illinois, has been without a job most of the winter. He decided to apply for entry in the U. S. Army, where he wouldn't have to worry when it came time to eat. But so long had he been without sufficient food that Ball's weight was 12 pounds under requirements. He decided to invest his remaining resources in wholesome diet for a week to make up the deficiency.

Ball, although six feet in height, weighed but 126 pounds when put on the recruiting scales. He beleves it will not be longer than two weeks until he han attain the required 138 pounds.

MILK FEVER THREATENS COWS

High Producers Are in Most Danger, Says Dairy Specialist

Great numbers of cows will freshen within the next two months. All of the high producers should be closely watched for milk fever during the 48-hour period immediately following freshening, says John M. Shaw, dairy husbandry specialist, Iowa State College. The only man who may feel secure from loss from this disease is the man with low producing cows.

Restlessness, stamping of the feet and general nervousness are among the early symptoms. These are quickly followed by a paralysis in the rear legs, which causes the typical stagger. The condition becomes rapidly worse until the animal gets down and is unable to rise. Cows suffering from milk fever are often found thus with heads thrown back with their muzzles pointed flankward

While the disease often results fatally within 24 hours the "air treatme'nt" is one of the surest cures Inflate the udder by means of amilk fever outfit and tie each teat with a strand of cloth to prevent air escape. In severe cases two or more inflations of the udder are often necessary. The air should remain in the udder from 12 to 24 hours, or longer in case of only partial recovery.

PETRIFIED TREES RESIST WINDS RAINS OF NEVADA

Tonopah, Nev.—That there is a petrified forest, one of the most beautiful in the country within forty miles of Tonopah, is a fact not generally known. More than ten petrified trees are still standing, just as they grew originally Little has been written about this forest on account of ts inaccessibilty.

The unique forest covers several hundred acres. The ground is strewn with the fossilized bones of animals, and here and there are small caves. The entrance to the forest is through a small canyon, which widens into a river bed, which in design reminds one somewhat of the Grand Canyon.

EASTER AND EGGS LONG ASSOCIATED

For Centuries Have Been Season's Symbols.

The relation between eggs and Easter does not seem far-fetched when it is remembered that the Easter festival is a celebration of life and that the egg is, perhaps, the most striking symbol of life, with its wonderful possibilities of development. This symbolical conception of it can be traced back to ancient times. One of the Roman games was racing on an oval track for eggs as prizes, and this was in honor of Castor and Pollux, the twins who had come forth from an egg laid by the Swan Lena. In an expense account dating back to the time of Edward I of England is the item: "Eighteen pence for 400 eggs to be used for Easter gifts." Much farther back than that the egg was considered the emblem of the resurrection. The custom of coloring the shells was probably the grafting of the art instinct upon the Easter observance. It once found much more elaborate expression than now, when sentimental inscriptions and beautiful designs were etched into the colors.

Many customs and superstitions have grown up around the Easter observance. Suckling's verse:

> But, oh, she dances such a way
> No sun upon an Easter day
> Is half so fine a sight, borrows meaning when we know that, according to an old belief, the sun in the heavens danced on Easter morning in joy for the resurrection. The Scotch tradition was still more specific, and claimed that the god of day whirled around like a cartwheel and gave three leaps, and these performances were solemnly argued about by wiseacres. Another belief was that as it shines or rains on Easter day so will it shine or rain a little every day in the year, and an old couplet ran:

> A good deal of rain on Easter day
> Gives a good crop of grass, but little good hay.

If the wind on that day was in the east, one should draw Easter water (whatever that may be) and bathe in it to prevent ill effects from the east wind. An old English custom was to wear a new article of dress on Easter Sunday to insure good fortune in love affairs during the coming year. The Easter hat is probably a relic of that practice. Still another custom was to court good luck by putting out all fires on Easter eve and lighting them afresh.

Constantine, the Christian emperor of Rome, first invested the observance of Easter with pomp. The day was distinguished by the most elaborate ceremonies in the churches, and by night not only the churches but the city itself was illuminated by a multitude of gigantic candles or wax pillars in an attempt to outshine the day.

Glad Message of Hope

In a world where there is much that is dreary and sad there is yet the message of Easter with its hope and good cheer. How hopeless the world would be if the life of the Master had closed with the crucifixion! How sublime it becomes when the life is crowned with the resurrection! We are living today in a world of subtle influence. We now realize more than ever the universality of truth. Even science has taught us the presence of laws whose workings are as invisible as the miracles of Biblical times.

Life's True Meaning

The present life gets its meaning from the life that is to come. Human life comes to beauty and dignity and power only as it is lived for eternal things.

AN EASTER GREETING!

THE lark at sunrise trills on high,
The greeting, Christ is risen!
And through the woods the blackbird pipes,
The greeting, Christ is risen!
From 'neath the eves the swallows cry,
The greetings, Christ is risen!
Throughout the world man's heart proclaims
The greeting, Christ is risen!
And echo answers from the grave,
In truth, He is risen.
—Martha G. D. Bainchi.

IMMORTALITY.

At this time countless millions bend the knee in reverence and worship of Him whom Christians hail as their Master. This is the date they assign to His resurrection, with its promise to mortals of salvation and life everlasting.

The priest at the altar delivers the message of promise and now cames Nature, a supporting witness, revived with the forces of spring, bursting with the pressure of bud and leaf and blossom, greening and rising from a wintry death that proves to have been only a sleep, to bear witness to the continuance of life.

This is the time of mystic renewal of life, which comes to lighten the burdens of man, to brighten his road and restore his hope and faith. The hope of immortality is an indestructible part of the human soul. It would live if the world were clad in perpetual ice. But Nature's resurrection is a welcome reinforcement of man's hope, and in itself it gives him new courage.

Hare-Pie Festival

Every Easter sees a strange custom enacted at Hallaton, in Leicestershire, England, a custom which has continued for long decades. This is what is known as "the Hare-Pie Festival." There is a procession formed which, led by a brass band, marches through the chief streets of the village to the church. Here, after a short service, the rector, assisted by two or three chosen officials, cuts up a large hare pie which has been specially made for the occasion. The pieces of pie are scrambled for down a steep bank in the village known as Hare Bank, and it is considered a noteworthy feat to secure the largest possible portion.

Later on there is feasting in the village, and a stated quantity of ale has to be given to the villagers in accordance with the traditions of the hare pie.

Vigorous Easter Dance

There are many old-time English country dances more weird and wonderful than the jazz.

The coconut dancers of Rossendale, in Lancashire, celebrate the anniversary according to ancient custom by a dance the like of which is to be seen nowhere else on earth.

They caper, they prance, they twist round and round like whirling dervishes, and perform many other startling evolutions. Their costumes, too, are unique. They wear floral turbans, embroidered kilts, white stockings, and fancy clogs. And attached to various parts of their clothing are boxwood cymbals made to resemble coconuts, which striking together cause a din that would make the most exacting of jazz band conductors envious.

Easter

Awake, wintry earth—
Fling off thy sadness!
Fair vernal flowers laugh forth
Your ancient gladness!
Christ is risen.

Let all the jubilant sounds of earth rise up and in a resonant wave of triumphant song proclaim:

Spring bursts today,
For Christ is risen and all the world's at play.

Again, amid the season of sun and shower—Nature's smiles and tears—seed so long in darkness sleeping have burst the bonds of winter's snows, invisible germs imprisoned in the bosom of the earth are born again, and live again in the radiant Eastertide of Nature's resurrection.

We may have borne the burden of sorrow, felt the sore sting of disappointment; have wept above the still form, and "sighed for the touch of a vanished hand, the sound of a voice that is still," but let us robe ourselves anew in the sunny gladness of a hope so bright—the hope that defies the grave and goes forth to meet the shadowy future fearlessly and unafraid.

The glory of Easter and a risen Lord bring healing to earth's wounds, and as the vernal sun lifts the mists and shadows from the mountain-tops, so the pledge of Easter holds before our eyes, the vision of immortality, the blessed hope—the promise, "Because I live, ye shall live also.—Farm and Ranch.

HATS "SAY IT WITH FLOWERS"; ONE-PIECE FROCK IS POPULAR

THIS season's chapeaux are surely "saying it with flowers" first, last and all the time. When fashion prescribes flowers in abundance, fascinating millinery is the result—which exactly describes the new spring hats.

Not only are our chapeaux generously beflowered, but in an overflow of enthusiasm stylists are pinning boutonnieres to match on milady's coat lapel or dropping a wee bouquet on her shoulder. Sometimes this floweret is attached to a ribbon which serves as a connecting link between chapeau and bouquet. This novelty of matching a boutonniere to the flowers on the hat is favored by smart Parisiennes, and milliners everywhere are encouraging a one-piece cloth dress. Far be it from us to wrest any honors from the ensemble costume than which there is no more popular fashion this season. However, as a faithful record of the mode, be it stated here that the one-piece frock still occupies a conspicuous niche in the realm of present-day modes.

In the modern street dress of cloth, sleeves are a very important item. That they must be long, buttoning to the wrist, is fashion's edict. This does not interfere with varied treatment, as the picture herewith bears witness. In fact designers are bestowing real artistry in the fashioning of the long sleeve.

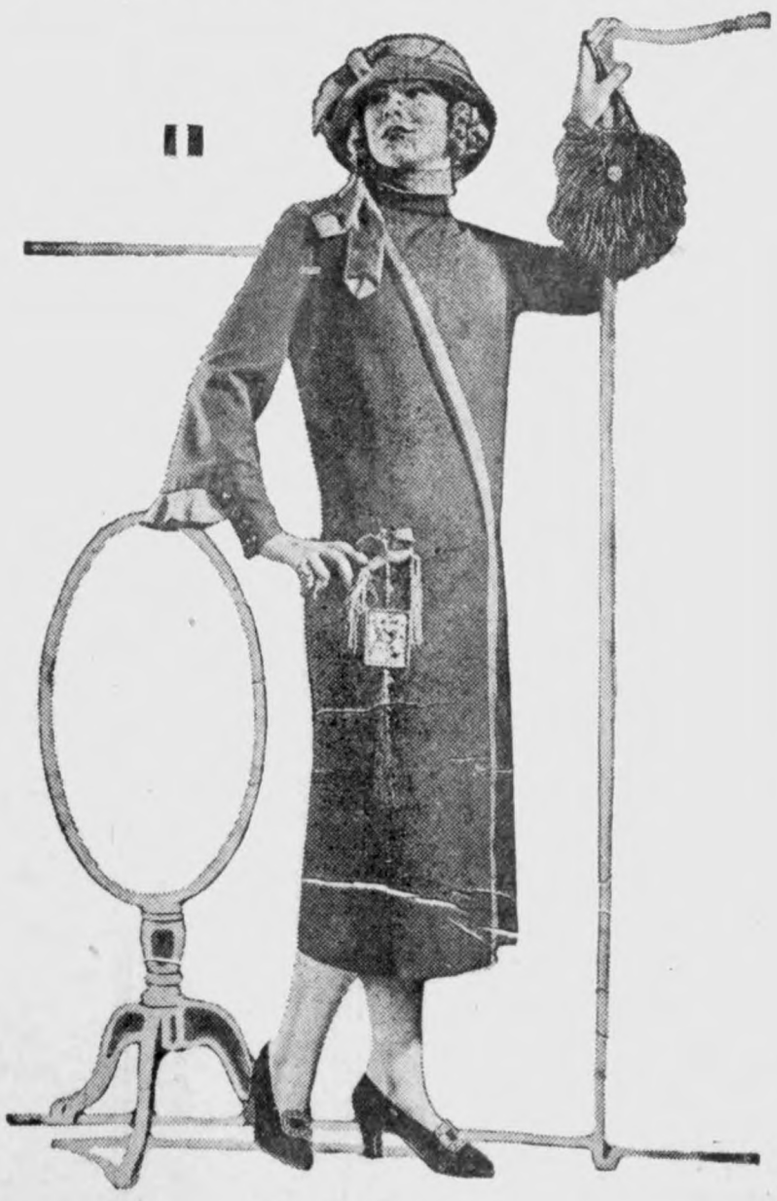
Milliners Are Beflowering Hats.

this lovely fashion by selling with the hat an extra matching flower to pin on coat or frock.

One of the most charming uses of flowers is the covering of the entire crown with them as noted in the second hat to the right center in this illustration of flower-bedecked hats. Violets were used in this instance topped with a single lovely pink rose.

Milliners particularly favor roses this season. Note them on the hat illustrated first in this group; also on the piquant straw shape to the right below.

Novelty is the charm of most of the little handmade straw hats. The model This also may be said of the new high-collar effect, which is also characteristic of the more exclusive cloth frocks. It is the choker collar which imparts supreme individuality to the model illustrated. Chinese embroidery and a heavily betasseled ornament lend a vivid note of color to this navy blue cloth conception. By the way, there is great rejoicing in the realm of fashion over the reappearance of navy blue on the field of colors sponsored by the mode. In discussing color special mention must be made of gray. Its importance is increasing hourly, especially since the first lady of the land selected moonstone gray for wear at the recent inauguration ceremonies.



Ultra Fashionable Frock.

at the center left of the picture is cleverly fashioned of taffeta silk and fine milan straw tape, with violets perched at the very tip-top of the unique silk-covered flange.

Another interesting method of positioning flowers on the hat is to start at the top of the crown, showering them down over one side as shown on the milan shape last in the group.

When is a street frock of marked individuality? Answer: When it dares not to be an ensemble costume but definitely plays the role of Front flares are also often introduced in the otherwise straightline dress for street wear. The idea of accenting this flare with a border of fur seems to be heartily indorsed by the majority of designers.

Especial emphasis is being placed on distinctly wearable cloth types this season, many of which look like coats but are really dresses. The introduction of the yoke gives a new aspect to tailored types.

—14—

"The back of my neck aches horribly," she confessed. "I couldn't have stood it much longer without a change of position."

He did not hear her. He was moving around the old man's sitting room, and now he came back with a wine glassful of sherry.

"Drink this," he directed.

She drank it obediently; but, notwithstanding the warming draft, he saw her shiver. He suddenly realized that the room was cold. He himself was comfortable in pajamas and a heavy silk dressing gown; but Verity's silk and lace negligee offered little protection from the chill air that crept through the windows with the approach of dawn.

"If you're going to stay here, you ought to be more warmly dressed," he absently observed. "Go to your room and put on something warm."

Under the words she started and gave him a quick glance. Then her lips set.

"I'm very comfortable," she said curtly.

"You're nothing of the sort; what's the use of saying you are?" He was looking at her now with increased attention.

She leaned forward and returned his look with a straight one of her own. In a low voice, and very distinctly, she spoke.

"Mr. Renshaw," she said, "grandfather put you in charge of his case and perhaps of the house. I don't know how far-reaching he meant his instructions to be. But, whatever he did, he did not put you in charge of me. Will you be good enough to remember that?"

Renshaw flushed and bit his lip. His smoldering dislike of Miss Campbell, forgotten for many hours, hotly flamed up again.

"Do as you please," he said coldly. "If you prefer to sit here unclothed and get pneumonia, that's your affair, of course. But please remember that it would add an unpleasant complication in a household that is going to be rather busy for the next few weeks."

One word in his speech infuriated her. He considered her "unclothed!" She set her teeth with a force that tightened her jawline. In her heart she knew he was right, but to obey him now would be intolerable. He must be taught his lesson by her actions as well as by her words. She shivered again. She was really very cold. She sat still a few minutes longer, while her resolution wavered like a wind-blown flame. Then, without a glance at him, or even at the pathetic, still groping old hand on the bedclothes, she rose stiffly and left the room. He followed and opened the door for her, an attention she acknowledged by briefly inclining her head without a glance in his direction.

She was gone only a few minutes, and when she returned he regarded with approval the garment she wore. It was a heavy velvet negligee, trimmed with dark fur, and with a high rolling collar that had the effect of a Medici ruff. Her eyes and cheeks were still blazing, and the vivid orange-hued garment, which she had obviously flung on because it was the first thing that came to her hand, so set off her amazing beauty that when she had sunk back into her big chair beside the bed, Renshaw looked at her with a puzzled sense of unreality. No woman had a right to be so lovely. It was the unpleasant sensations that made her seem unreal. Surely no woman—now—could stir his pulses.

He approached her with an expression made up of surprise and humility.

"Forgive me," he begged very gently. "I deliberately spoke as I did because it was the only way to keep you from catching a bad cold. I'm not sorry I did it, but I am horribly sorry you misunderstood me. Now, will you let me make you as comfortable as I can?"

She met his eyes, and the brilliant hardness died out of her own.

"Thank you," she said; and she added, almost below her breath, "I was very foolish."

Though the words were so low, he caught them. They were shy things. They seemed to scurry like frightened mice around the silent room. It was not easy for Verity Campbell to confess herself in the wrong.

She had taken her grandfather's groping hand as she spoke, and it clutched hers with avid content, holding it tightly as if in fear of again losing it. Renshaw, laden with cushions, arranged them behind her back and under her arm in a way to give her the greatest possible comfort in a position strained at the best. When he had done what he could, he returned to his own chair.

Neither spoke. Even the old man on the bed was quiet and seemingly at peace, now that his groping hand had found what it sought.

The door opened, and Jenks insinuated himself into the room. He glanced at the figure on the bed, waited a moment for orders, and, receiving none, faded out like a departing shadow. As he went, however, he sent Renshaw a glance that brought the secretary to his side in the hall.

"Mr. Campbell's getting along all right, sir, isn't he?" he asked anxiously.

"I hope so."

The expression of concern on the butler's face deepened.

"Doctor Morris told me he would probably be unconscious for days," he went on. "That looks as if he was pretty sick, doesn't it, sir. Don't you think he may come to sooner?"

Renshaw shook his head.

"Morris is a better authority on that than I am," he pointed out.

"But I've seen cases, sir, where they came to in a few hours." Jenks bowed his head. "I can't help worrying," he confessed almost humbly. "It don't seem like a man has much chance when he lies like that."

Renshaw's lips parted. He had been about to say that the old man had already momentarily recovered consciousness, but he changed his mind. That report belonged to the doctors.

"Don't worry, Jenks," he said kindly. Mr. Campbell may be in this condition for a week, but I think he will get well."

"Oh, thank you, sir." Jenks' stolid face was almost human.

Renshaw returned to the sick room. Half an hour later the figure of Doctor Morris loomed through the first weary light of the lagging dawn. Coming to the bedside, the physician nodded, first at the quiet patient, then into the alert eyes of Renshaw.

"He's all right. Nothing more to do at present. Let me know when Doctor Stanley comes," he murmured, and thankfully retreated to the quarters Jenks had assigned to him. Doctor Morris never wasted energy. If there had been no one else to watch, he himself would faithfully have watched the patient. But two attendants in the sick room were enough. If he had been a younger man he might have remained just to watch Miss Campbell. She was worth looking at, though the self-contained chap in the other chair didn't seem to know it. There was something arresting about that fellow, too. He would try to remember to ask Doctor Stanley about him in the morning.

Back in the sick room, the self-contained chap's eyes were at last on Verity. They could safely rest on her now, for her own eyes were closed and her deep, quiet breathing indicated that she was asleep. He was glad of that. She was asleep, and she was warm. She had even let him tuck an afghan around her knees. Now, without offense, he could study her in detail, as he might have studied something beautiful in a museum.

He liked the line of her black hair on her forehead. There was a tiny peak in the center, the "widow's peak," he had heard it called, the old superstition being that a woman whose hair grew in that little point on the brow was doomed to be a widow. Her closed eyes and the velvety whiteness of her skin gave her face an oddly lifeless look, the lifelessness of a beautiful statue; but no statue had those exquisitely arched black eyebrows, those long, slightly curled black eyelashes, and those magic crimson curves of the mouth. It was a proud mouth, almost a cold mouth, though it was so lovely. Indeed, the whole face seemed cold, despite the burnished blackness of hair and eyebrows and eyelashes. Yet Verity Campbell was not cold. She was full of fire—ready to flash up in fierce anger at a word or a look; perhaps, he did not know, she was equally ready to flash up under softer emotions.

He deliberately tried to keep his thoughts on her. He was tired of thinking about the mysteries of Tawno Ker, of speculating as to what Campbell had meant by what he had said. But his thoughts returned to such things in connection with the girl, and the problems they presented could not be ignored.

Of course, he would tell her nothing, if he could help it. That he had already decided. But was there anyone else he should tell? Stanley, for example? Stanley was a hard-headed, sane old chap—so hard-headed, indeed, that it would be very difficult for him to credit Renshaw's story of blue circles and uncanny midnight sounds. Stanley would either think that Renshaw was exaggerating natural conditions easily explained, or he would think Renshaw's nerves were playing him tricks. Renshaw did not wish Stanley to get any such notion as that into his head. Stanley was vigorously maintaining that he, Renshaw, was in reality an absolutely well man if he himself could be made to realize it. Renshaw was not willing to have Stanley change that theory. If he did, it might upset things badly. Stanley might not be willing to leave his old friend in the hands of a man whose nerves were uncertain.

And what was true of Stanley was even more true of Morris. Stanley at least had imagination. Morris, Renshaw was already convinced by the man's appearance, had none. If he told his experience to Morris, about the first thing Morris would do would be to ask Jenks what sort of fellow the new secretary was. And it was quite on the cards that Jenks might feel moved, out of loyalty to his helpless master, to tell Morris all about the strange bargain Campbell and Renshaw had made.

Renshaw moved helplessly in his chair. He had carried through the terms of that bargain with genuine indifference to its effect on Campbell. But it sickened him to think of the servants gossiping over it, and still less did he want the slow-moving mind of Morris to be busied with it. He came to an abrupt conclusion. He would tell nothing to anyone, but he would, if possible, get out of Stanley all he knew about the "unusual conditions" of Tawno Ker.

As if invoked by the decision, Stanley's automobile came racing up the avenue. The arrival of the great physician lacked the consideration shown by Doctor Morris' brisk but silent entrance. The powerful engine of Stanley's limousine announced the car's approach to all within hearing; a bell sounded; the front door actually banged. The great doctor blew into the room like the spirit of the autumn storm itself. With him came Morris, who, aroused by the noise of his entrance, had hurried down stairs in time to meet his colleague in the hall.

Behind the two lurked Jenks, wistful hands ready for the doctor's overcoat. Stanley jerked it off and tossed it to him with one efficient gesture. The next moment he was at his patient's bedside, grunting acknowledgment of the presence of Verity and Renshaw, but looking at neither of them. Renshaw observed that another figure had joined the doctors, the figure of an efficient-looking young woman still enveloped in a heavy motor coat—obviously the trained nurse Doctor Stanley had brought with him. He put a gentle hand under Verity's elbow and helped her to her feet. She had been awakened by the entrance of the doctors, and was blinking rather dazedly. He drew her away from the bed. There was nothing they two could do now.

They waited in silence, hearing the voices but not the words of the doctors. In a very short time Stanley came forward and formally shook hands with them both. His figure seemed to fill the room, and, though he was well past seventy, he radiated vitality, from his mass of thick white hair to the big feet planted so firmly on the floor as he faced them.

"Things might be a lot worse, my dear," he told Verity with brusque kindliness. "I think we'll bring him around all right, but it will take time."

He looked at the girl's face. Every feature was quivering under the sudden relaxation of the strain she had been through.

"There, there," he said, patting her hand. "You're tired out and frightened, but you'll be all right tomorrow. I've got a first-rate nurse here, and another will come in the morning. Miss Watson will take charge. She's gone off already to get into her uniform. Go to bed, my child. I'll see you at breakfast. You too, Renshaw. Clear out! Your work's done for the night. Sleep late if you can."

He gave the young man's shoulder a friendly little push, shot a straight look into his eyes, and nodded complacently, as if the glance had confirmed an earlier impression.

"Go to bed," he repeated. "Jenks says you've both been on the watch ever since it happened. It's our turn now."

He listened with interest to Renshaw's report of the patient's flicker of consciousness. He was in excellent spirits, evidently greatly relieved to discover that his old friend had what he called "a d—d good fighting chance."

"He'll fight, too," he chuckled to Morris, a little later. "He's made up his mind to outlive me. That will help him."

Renshaw escorted Verity to the door of her rooms. There, to his surprise, she put her hand in his. At the touch of the small fingers his self-consciousness returned. He held the hand vaguely a moment, as if he did not know quite what to do with it, then gently gave it back to her.

"Good-night," he said. "Sleep well. I'm almost sure there's nothing to worry about now."

She nodded. "I know," she said. "Good-night. And thank you, again. I'm sorry I was so horrid."

He shook his head. "You were not horrid," he protested.

She entered her room and closed the door, but she did not immediately lose the sense of his presence. They had been together for hours, and an incredible thing had happened. Notwithstanding her dislike for him, her lack of faith in him, her half scorn of him, she knew that throughout that time she had depended on him. She had, in a way, leaned on him—on something in him which, in those hours at least, had seemed like strength. The knowledge both puzzled and embarrassed her. She should have been equal to the emergency. For, after all, he had actually done nothing except carry her grandfather to his bed. He had done that well and easily. He had been a stunning figure in his soft, rich dressing gown.

She undressed thoughtfully. She was no longer over anxious about her grandfather. He was in Doctor Stanley's care, and Doctor Stanley had virtually promised her that he would get well. But it was not of Stanley she thought, nor did she even recall her own long vigil by the bed, with the patient's hand so avidly clutching hers. With singular persistence, one picture filled her mind—the picture of the moment when the young man had lifted the old man as if he were a little child, and, with flying garment and the swift, splendid stride of a trained athlete, had carried her stricken grandfather to his bed.

High and Low Lands

The maximum difference between the high land and the low in the United States proper is 14,477 feet. According to the official figures, Mount Whitney, the highest point, is 14,501 feet above sea level, while Death valley, the lowest point, is 275 feet below sea level. These two points, which are both in California, are less than 90 miles apart. The difference between them seems small, however, when compared with the difference between the highest and lowest point in Asia. Mount Everest rises 29,002 feet above sea level, whereas the shores of the Dead sea are 12,290 feet below it—a difference of 41,292 feet.

Has Made Success of Marriage and Career

Mary Roberts Rinehart, discussing her family life, her success and what it has meant to her, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan, prompts Ray Long to say:

"Mary Roberts Rinehart is like a breath of fresh air. She is a refreshing answer to those women who talk of the impossibility of marriage and a career. She has made the wonderful discovery that her marriage—her family—is what makes a career worth while.

"Here she is—this mother whose six-foot sons treat her as a 'pal'—beautiful, a charming hostess, distinguished as a novelist, as a playwright, as a short-story writer, as a traveler who describes what she sees with picturesque humor.

"Mrs. Rinehart succeeds in so many things because she wants success for others, not for herself. She loves her work, takes fine pride in it, of course. But back of it all is the urge to do for others. And that, after all, is the biggest thing in life; to lay the fruits of your effort at the feet of some one you love."

Luck in Finding Diamonds

The finding of the Cullinan diamond was, like many great discoveries, the result of an accident. The glance of an overseer of a South African mine was caught by a brilliant flash of light. He investigated and dug out with a pocket knife one of the wonder gems of the world. The stone in the rough was four inches long, two inches wide and weighed 3,024 carats. A poor Kaffir boy found the famous Excelsior diamond, valued at approximately $4,500,000. The boy received a horse and cart and about $500 in exchange.

What's in a Name?

When Mary Edith, aged four, came home from her first day at kindergarten, her mother asked her the name of her teacher. Mary Edith replied, "Her name is Miss Buttonhook." Mother thought there must be a mistake and told her to make sure of teacher's name on the following day.

Mary Edith dutifully reported that the teacher's name wasn't Miss Buttonhook at all; it was Miss Screwdriver. The teacher in question was Miss Cooprider, of the Irvington kindergarten.—Indianapolis News.

EASTER SERVICES WERE VERY INSPIRING

Large Number Admitted Into Church Membership

. . . .A. W. Gauger, Pastor.

This years' Easter Sunday will ever be remembered as a Red Letter day in both the Klemme and Liberty churches. The day in itself was most beautiful and bespoke new life and resurrection in nature about us, a day that made it easy to go to church. The response was accordingly. Not only was all seating room taken but standing room as well.

In both places the service was most effective and appealed to the best that is in man. Many, we doubt not, resolved to serve God better than ever, while Christ became the real Resurrection Power in the lives of some who had not received him before.

Four adults and eight children were baptized. We are advised of fully as many more to be baptized—of such who could not be present. This was an inspiring scene.

The reception of thirty-six adults and youth into church membership brought joy to every heart. We will receive from four to six more at an early date, while a goodly number are contemplating coming in between now and the session of our annual conference.

We want to acknowledge the splendid work of the choir, which did much to make the service inspiring. This is equally true of the instrumental music rendered.

The Easter program put on by the Liberty S. S. spoke of Easterjoy and hope. We all enjoyed it very much.

The church dinner arranged by the ladies of the Liberty church as well carried out and afforded splendid social opportunities.

Dr. Bushnell was at his "Best" and gave two very helpful Easter addresses.

Next Sunday morning we will speak of "Our Threefold Ministry" as suggested by Peter. This however does not refer to the pastor's ministry but to your ministry and we want you to hear it.

On Sunday evening we will speak on "Turning the World Upside Down as alluded to in the book of Acts.

We will celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in connection with the morning service in the Liberty church. We are looking for a full representation at this service.

Two Cent Gasoline Tax Becomes Effective Today

GAS TAX BECOMES EFFECTIVE TODAY

Road Law Will not Take Effect Until Nov. 30 By Terms

Des Moines—Beginning today, Iowa motorists will pay two cents per gallon more for their gasoline and the revenue will be used for improving the highways of the state. Gov. Hammill late Thursday signed the Bergman gasoline tax bill and the Shaff road bill. He was prepared to sign the appropriations bill but enrolling of it had been completed when he left the executive offices.

The gasoline tax bill carries a publication cause which will place it in effect upon publication in two newspapers.

Road Law in Effect Nov. 30

The road law becomes effective Nov. 30, 1925.

The gasoline tax bill will go into effect April 16.

Publication of the gasoline tax law, which levies a tax of 2 cents a gallon on all gasoline used in the state must be made in two newspapers.

Johnson Collects Tax

State Treasurer R. E. Johnson, who will collect the tax and administer the law, stated he will be ready to commence collection of the tax by that date.

When the tax goes into effect, the retail price of gasoline will be raised by the amount of the tax, 2 cents per gallon.

It will also be necessary for the state treasurer to collect the tax from every filling station and dealer in gasoline until the tax has been collected in all existing stocks in the state.

Afterward wholesalers bringing gasoline into the state will pay the tax direct to the treasurer of state and charge the tax to the dealers to whom they distribute it.

This method of collecting the tax will keep its collection cost at a minimum, as it will be handled in the state treasurer's office.

Treasurer Johnson said he will need to expand his office force only by the addition of one employe, a chief clerk of the gasoline tax collection division.

The road bill, which amends the Iowa Primary law to conform to requirements of the federal highway aid to the states by giving the highway commission additional authority over maintenance and cosstruction of roads, will become effective in time for making road contracts for next year.

Distribution of Funds

Until the road law goes into effect all primary funds, including the additional $1,500,000 estimated share of the primary road fund in the gasoline tax receipts will be allotted to counties in the same proporaion they now are allotted.

The two principal bills before the legislature, the Shaff bill amending Iowa's primary road law to conform to federl aid requirements and the Bergman bill, imposing a tax of 2 cents per gallon on all gasoline, received final approval in both houses Thursday afternoon.

The house concurred in two amendments to the Shaff bill, added in the senate, and the refused to concur in the third. Then the bill went back to the senate chamber receded, by vote of 29 to 20 from the amendment rejected by the house.

That completed action on the road bill.

The Bergman gasoline tax bill had been waiting concurrence of the senate in house amendments for more than a week. Thursday afternoon the senate in prefunctory fashion, concurred in all the house amendamendments, ending legislative action on the gasoline tax.

Everybody buying gasoline must pay the tax. Allpersons buying gasoline for use other than propulsion of motor vehicles on the highways however may secure a refund by filing proper information with the state treasurer.

The proceeds of the tax will be used entirely for road construction One-third, $1.500,000 will be used on primary roads, and equal amounts will be used on county and township roads.

The only additional road building revenue made available by this legislature was the gasoline tax proceed The Legislature, howevere by the adoption of the Shaff bill preserved 2,000,000 annually in federal aid.

DISASTROUS FIRE ON ALBERS FARM SATURDAY

SPRAYS DESTROY PLANT LICE

Pests Must be Combated by Material Which Kill by Contact

Plant lice commonly cause the young leaves of various trees and bushes to become curled and destorted, thereby impairing the vitality of the plants. Three species of these lice or aphids infest apple trees, two green and one of a purplish color. The latter is the most destructive because it stunts the fruit. A black species is a serjous pest on cherry trees, while plums are subject to attack from a brown and a gray species. Another kind causes red pockets on the leaves of currants, while still another causes 'witches brooms' in gooseberries. There are many other species which attack ornamental and fruit trees and bushes.

Plant lice are not susceptible to stomach poisons and so must be controlled by the application of such insecticides as nicotine and miscible oils, which kill the insects by cantact says Dr. B. B. Fulton, entomologist, Iowa State College. Spray with a mixture of one pint of nicotine sulphate and five paunds of soap to 100 gollans, or use oils at three percent strength. For small plants, one pound of fish oil soap or good ordinary soap to three gallons of water will work satisfactarily. In combination sprays, nicotine may be mixed with any of the ordinary materials. Oils will work with Bordeoux or lead arsenate, but soap does not mix well. Nicotine dusts will control aphids or bushes.

To kill aphids successfully it is important to spray just after they hatch, since when they begin working the leaves curl up around them and protect them from the spray. Usually the best time to spray is just when the green leaves appear at the bud tips.

BODY OF COLLINS IS REACHED AGAIN

Remains of Explorer Found in Fair Condition Report Workers

CAVE CITY, Ky, April10—Workers engaged in a second effort to recover the body of Floyd Collins from Sand Cave, where he was caught by a rock fall, Jan. 30, reached the body this fternoon and found it in fair condition, says a report reaching here from Sand Cave. The body will not be recovered today, however.

W. H. Hunt, Central City, miner in charge of the work, said the party reached the body through the old shaft, which was abonded when Collins was consigned to his natural resting place. The shaft was cleaned to the bottom, 55 feet, and the party, then proceeded through the later, which volunteer workers excated in February.

Hunt's only comment was that the body "seemed to be in fair condition." He would not reveal his immediate plans for removing it from its wedged position.

When Collins was found dead, Feb 16, volunteer workers decided to leave the body where Collins was caught, because of the danger connected with any attempt to remove it, The body is caught from behind and one one has ever been able to reach and remove the rock which holds it.

SIX BUILDINGS DESTROYED BY FIRE ON GEO. ALBERS FARM SATURDAY MORNING

Loss in Buildings, Stock and Grain Will Run Over $7,000

Fire of unknown origin destroyed nearly all of the fine buildings on the George Albers farm two and one-half miles east of Klemme Saturday, shortly before noon.

A list of the property consumed by the flames includes a fine barn, 36x 64 with 16 foot posts, built less than two years ago and modern in all respects; a corn crib with over-head granery, elevator, feed grinders, corn sheller and other equipment, this building bein 30 x 32; a 20x32 hog house, six head of sows and an unknown number of small pigs; a chicken house; a 14x38 silo and a large quantity if silage; and in addition to these buildings Mr. Albers lost all of his hay which was in the barn, about 2,000 bushels of oats, and 700 bushels of corn, some harness, many small tools, fence posts, etc, about the farm yard.

Fortunately, the wind fanned the flames away from their fine house, otherwise the whole set of buildings might have been destroyed, as there are a couple of other buildings to the north and west of the burned area.

Mr. Albers is starting right in to rebuild the barn and other buildings and will put up duplicates of the fine buildings he lost. Insurance covered a part of the loss. The fire was first discovered as the men were grinding feed in the granery and smoke was seen coming out of the top of the barn at the south end, but the flames had gotten such a start that it was impossible to control them. It is a mystery as to how the fire started as the flames were first seen high up in the barn aud this part of the barn was vacant.

Card of Thanks

I want to take this means of thanking all who assisted us at the time of the fire and for helping haul material and do other work for us since that time. George Albers.

HERRIOT CABINET IS OVERTHROWN

Senate Refuses Vote of Confidence After Stormy Session.

Paris.—Premier Herriot's cabinet, sore beset for many days, fell Friday night after a duel of words in the senate between its chief and former Premier Poincare.

Rejected by 156 to 134 on a vote of confidence, the premier led his ministry immediately to the Elysee palace, where he tendered his resignation to President Doumergue.

The latter accepted the resignation, but requested Herriot and his aids to remain in office until a new premier could be selected. No definite indication as to who he would be could be found.

Poincare's dramatic last-minute intervention in the senate's fierce six-hour debate on Herriot's record did more than anything else to accelerate the expected fall of the Radical-Socialist government. The senate had continued its session without dinner in order to clarify one way or another the internal political crisis which has thrown the country into confusion for a week.

The vote overthrowing the government was taken shortly before nine o'clock. Among those casting ballots to reject Herriot was Alexandre Millerand, re-elected to the senate five days ago, just in time to take revenge on the premier for the maneuver that cost Millerand the Presidency of France when the new ministry assumed power last June.

Aristide Briand, seven times premier, seems to be the logical choice to tide France over its financial crisis.

Briand announced that he would accept the task of forming a new ministry, if asked, under certain conditions. One would be that if the left bloc refused to tolerate a cabinet in which it would not have dominance, President Doumergue and the senate must consent to dissolve the chamber and call a new election for deputies.

The country's present political necessity is for a ministry which would inspire public confidence and persuade the public to make great financial sacrifices through taxation, as well as to persuade holders of government bonds not to demand reimbursement of the more than 18,000,000,000 francs falling due this year.

The fall of the ministry naturally nullifies the much-discussed capital levy project, and new revenue-raising projects either must be decreed by the new ministry or legislated later.

Former Girl Waif Has Fortune of $8,000,000

New York.—The unknown foundling of an East side hallway, a little more than twelve years ago unwanted and unloved, became the richest girl of her age in the world with a fortune of $8,000,000.

By the will of her foster father, Warren Mifflin Leeds, brother of William B. Leeds, the "tinplate king," which was filed here, this child inherits the bulk of an estate estimated at more than $4,000,000.

And scarcely two years ago she received $4,000,000 from her foster mother, who plunged to her death from a window in the Leeds home after a nervous breakdown.

The new rich girl's origin is unknown. On the last day of January, 1913, a policeman took to Bellevue hospital a little bundle of pink-and-white humanity which had been given him by a Greek woman on his beat. The girl, she explained, had been left on her doorstep.

In the foundlings' ward at Bellevue the baby was christened Katherine Kennedy and denominated a Baptist. Mrs. Leeds had her rechristened Joy Louise Leeds.

TURKS MOBILIZE TO WAR ON KURDS

Revolt More Serious Than Reported—1,000 Killed.

London.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Constantinople says the Turks have captured Ghendj in Kurdistan. The Kurds are said to have lost 1,000 men killed and many wounded.

Constantinople.—Gen. Ismet Pasha, the premier, addressing the national assembly at Angora, said it has been found necessary to order a complete mobilization.

He gave as the reason the threatening aspect of the revolt in Kurdistan and other dangers to which the country is exposed.

The premier admitted that the revolt was much graver than newspaper reports had indicated.

The insurgents had attacked places widely apart, such as Malatia, Mardin and Melazgerd, and even a fortnight ago threatened Eghin.

The premier added that he feared the revolt would assume even greater proportions.

The government's prompt military measures, however, had begun to be felt.

The rebels had been driven back from urban centers into the mountains, but nevertheless they retained their organization and were continuing the struggle.

Workers Reach Body of Collins in Cave Tomb

Cave City, Ky.—Workmen led by W. H. Hunt, Central City miner, reached the body of Floyd Collins, the unfortunate cave explorer who was trapped by a rockfall in Sand cave and died there after 17 days' entombment.

To reach the body it was necessary to dig and crib from the 47-foot level to the bottom of the original 55-foot shaft and then through a winding 25-foot lateral.

Faster progress was made than had been expected, officials in charge of the work said, because the concrete which was poured into the lateral and which was intended to seal Collins in his natural tomb had not hardened, although it had been there nearly two months.

Hunt stated if no other method would permit the lifting of the mammoth rock from the body the rock would be dynamited, small charges being used until it was chipped away sufficiently to permit lifting it.

RUTH, "HOME RUN KING," STRICKEN

Mighty Batsman of New York Yankees Collapses on Train.

New York.—Borne unconscious on a stretcher, his eyes unseeing and his lips and face puffed and swollen, Babe Ruth, the mighty batsman of the New York Yankees and idol of the baseball world, was carried through the Pennsylvania station from his spring training trip.

Shortly after the train left Manhattan Transfer, over on the Jersey side, the mighty Babe collapsed in the dressing room of the car and struck his head on the washstand. For a time it was feared he had suffered a concussion of the brain and possibly a fracture of his skull.

For a half hour he was unconscious in the station before an ambulance arived to take him to St. Vincent's hospital, but soon after reaching the hospital he regained consciousness and recognized those about him.

It was not until then that Dr. Edward King, who had attended the great hitter in his many illnesses and ailments during the last nine years, pronounced his patient out of danger. Doctor King's statement follows:

"Ruth's condition is not serious. He is run down and has low blood pressure and there is the indication of a slight attack of the flu. What he needs is rest. He should have been in bed a week ago. He has a temperature of 101. He is resting now and his conditions is satisfactory. It is possible he may be out in two or three days and that he may play in the opening game of the season. Ruth is such a powerful fellow he is likely to recover overnight if he wants to, as he has in the past."

Ruth was sent on ahead of his team after he had collapsed at Asheville, N. C., last Tuesday. He first was taken ill Sunday, but, despite his condition, he insisted upon playing in the exhibition games that day and Monday, making two home runs in the Sunday contest and another, which won the game for the Yankees, the following day.

Tuesday, however, his condition became more serious. He was ordered to his bed, and then it was decided to send him on to New York as soon as he was able to travel.

E. J. Sailstad, Who Burned Corpse to Elope, Paroled

Green Bay, Wis.—Edward J. Sailstad, serving a four-year sentence in the state reformatory here on a charge of arson, when told that he had been granted a parole, said he was anxious to find a position as soon as possible and resume his activity as a private citizen.

He has been in the reformatory since December 30, 1923.

Dorothy Anderson, Sailstad's "sunshine girl," who was sentenced to four years at the women's industrial home at Taycheedah in connection with the same case, will not be considered for parole for several months.

The trial attracted wide interest because of the nation-wide search for the pair, who disappeared after the burning of a cottage on Lake Nebaganon. At the trial it was brought out that the body of a friend of Sailstad was taken from its grave and placed in the burning cottage with some of Sailstad's personal effects while he and the Anderson girl disappeared.

Columbus, Ohio.—Hal Donahey, nineteen-year-old son of Gov. Vic Donahey, is home again and the episode which linked his name with that of Lillian Vogel, fifteen-year-old Zanesville (Ohio) schoolgirl, is a closed incident.

Miss Vogel, who disappeared from Zanesville and whose whereabouts remained a mystery until she was found in a local rooming house by Mrs. Donahey, was placed on strict probation for a year.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

PUBLIC GENEROUS IN GIVING TO FUND

Marked success is being met with in the public appeal for the American Legion $5,000,000 endowment fund for the disabled and the orphans of the World war. Legionnaires and the general public are giving generously of time, effort and money to the fund.

Many posts are raising their local quotas for the fund in a day or two of effort. At Corydon, Ind., Commander C. A. Keller and his post service officer raised the quota of $350 in two afternoons by their own efforts. Evansville, Ind., home of State Chairman Marcus S. Sonntag, raised nearly its entire quota of more than $15,000 in three days.

Indiana was the first state to make the public appeal. The mine disaster at Sullivan, Ind., in which 51 men lost their lives shortly before the campaign, drove close home to the people of that state the need of such work for the disabled and the orphans as the Legion is doing and as the fund is intended to maintain. Kentucky was the second state to start the campaign, following a three-night radio barrage.

Westfield, Ind., resorted to an interesting device in raising its quota of $250. A Legionnaire remembered that there were precisely 250 pockets in the machine gun belts used by the Germans in the war. The belt was placed conspicuously in a store window. As contributions came in, the pockets were stuffed with dollar bills. The quota was quickly completed.

Senator William B. McKinley of Illinois was the first person to make a large individual contribution to the fund. Lieut. Wayland Brooks, D. S. C., and Michael J. Cullen, D. S. C., presented the appeal for the endowment to the senator. They suggested that he contribute $2,000. He handed them a check for $5,000. Brooks and Cullen are members of the Combat Medal Men's association of Chicago, which was the first organization in Illinois to contribute.

A Chicago newspaper feature column recently ran this:

"'I believe,' says the 'I Believe' card of the American Legion in its drive for a $5,000,000 endowment fund, 'that the orphan children of those who made the supreme sacrifice for America are entitled to the same chance in life which they would have received had not their fathers given their lives to the nation.' That's pretty easy to believe. But believing isn't enough. We want to do something besides just believing. Therefore—now watch us closely, American Legion—we do here and now gedunk $100 into said endowment fund. Splash!"

Tennessee's first contribution came from Canada. It was a check for $50 from Phillip N. Libby of Lemiskaming, Province of Quebec. Libby is a former member of Hammond post, Kingsport, Tenn.

Many governors and former governors are interesting themselves actively in the endowment movement in their respective states. Among the honorary chairmen chosen are: Gov. Austin Peay, Tennessee; Gov. Henry L. Fuqua, Louisiana; former Gov. Thomas C. McRae, Arkansas; Gov. W. W. Brandon, Alabama; Gov. Clifford M. Walker, Georgia, joint honorary chairman with Chancellor David C. Barrow, University of Georgia. Among the active chairmen are: Gov. E. W. Morgan, West Virginia; former Gov. Thomas E. Kilby, Arkansas; former Gov. Hugh M. Dorsey, Georgia.

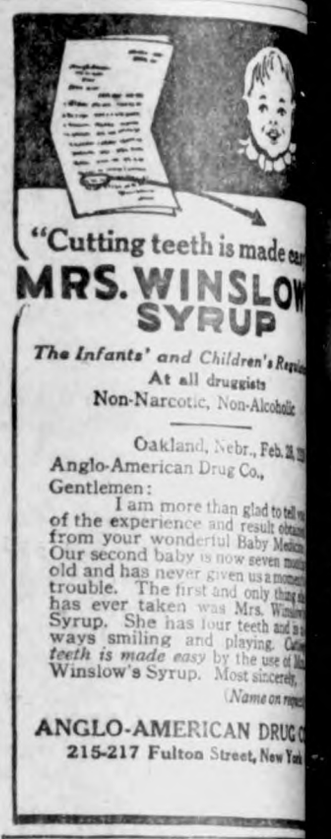
Open Coffin to Take Buddy's Finger Prints

A coffin was opened recently at Pueblo, Colo., just as the grave yawned to receive it, to get the finger prints of a former service man to accompany his application for adjusted compensation. Friends of John McNichol, of Durango, Colo., were grouped about the grave when an automobile drove up and a group of American Legion men stepped from it. They made known their request, which was complied with.

During his last hours McNichol's friends made out his application papers for compensation. He was so weak that he could only affix a scrawled mark to the papers in the presence of witnesses. At the last minute it was discovered that his finger prints had not been obtained and the posthumous finger prints were taken.

To Bar Sectionalism in Teaching History

At a recent conference of the national executive committee of the American Legion, the committee endorsed the movement for the publication of a popular history of the United States, which will be non-partisan and non-sectarian and will have the backing of more than 300 history experts. The editor is Charles F. Horne of New York university, late of the A. E. F. The purpose is to do away with sectionalism in the teaching of history. Legionnaires point out that today there are hundreds of histories, and children in different sections of the country are being taught history colored by local prejudice, the versions exactly contradicting each other.



It's a wise girl who is able to analyze her own complexion.

Unusual, is it not, to see a group of husky men stand back and watch a house burn? But it was only a test made by the bureau of standards in Washington with a so-called fireproof building filled with safes, filing cabinets and some combustible material, to determine just how much fire and heat they would stand.

Under a new navy rule tars have to keep their hair "shingled" no longer than 1½ inches on top. This photograph shows Admiral L. R. Robison, commander-in-chief of the United States fleet, inspecting the crew of the U. S. S. California, giving their haircuts and personal appearance a close scrutiny.

He was reared on a farm, finished grammar school, and then entered a lawyer's office. Later he became interested in the oil industry and his rise was rapid.

NEW IOWA LAWS COST RUNS HIGH

LEGISLATIVE EXPENSE IS LITTLE MORE THAN $3,000.00 PER DAY —PAY ROLLS INDICATE.

Now comes the high cost of law-making!

Figures compiled from the legislative pay rolls and expense accounts show the forty-first general assembly, which has constantly dubbed itself the "economy legislature," will have cost the state a total of over $270,000.

Even so, the economy title is justly applied since recent legislatures have all been more costly to the state in expense than the present body.

The printing bill alone, which is somewhat smaller than in recent sessions, will total over $27,000 for the forty-fist general assembly. This item is chiefly made up of free stationery given the members, and the printing costs connected with the bills introduced and the daily house and senate journals telling what transpired in the session on the preceding day.

The principal items of expenses for the session connected with this legislature are:

Members' salaries ($1,000 each)	$158,000
Salary of president of senate and speaker of house	4,000

MRS. WILHELMY SAVED BY FRIEND

Doctor Advised Operation Friend Said Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound First

St. Paul, Minnesota.—"I was all run-down from overwork and worry, had no appetite, could not sleep at night, and looked like a corpse. I have six children (five boys and one girl) and did not get any strength after my last baby was born. I was getting worse and thinner every day. The doctor said I had to go to the Hospital but this I could not do on account of my family. So I went to a friend of mine and told her what the doctor had told me and she said, 'Now do as I tell you. Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as I have done. It helped me.' So I started taking the Vegetable Compound and I noticed after the first few bottles that I felt considerably better. After taking 9 or 10 bottles I got over my fainting spells. Everybody who sees me now notices the great improvement in my health. I am gaining in weight and strength and am feeling fine. Eat well and sleep good nights. Any woman can write to me and I will answer her letter." — Mrs. MARY WILHELMY, 309 Duke Street, St. Paul, Minnesota.

RESINOL

IOWA AT TOP ON T. B. ELIMINATION

Three of Six T. B. Free Counties Registered Since Jan. 1.

AMES, April 13.—Iowa has three of the six counties in the United States to qualify since Jan 1, as tuberculosis free, according to a report just received from the United States department of agriculture. Jasper, Wapello and Pottawattamie are the Iowa counties with this distinction. Winnebago was previously accredited, making four in all in Iowa.

These results have come about because of the campaign being rager against tuberculosis by the United States department of agriculture, the state department of agriculture, the extension service of Iowa State college and the county farm bureaus co-operating.

In order to become accredited, a county must test all of the cattle and find less than one-half of one per cent tubercular. As soon as this status is reached the county becomes accredited. All hogs which are then shipped from the county and prove tuberculosis are purchased by the packers at a premium of 10 cents per hundred. C. F. Smith of Newton was the first Jasper county farmer to ship a load of hogs after the county became accredited. His hogs sold for $14.15 per hundred in Chicago, top price for the day, and then the packer who receievd them paid Mr. Smith the additional 10 cents per hundred, which increased his recipts about $17 from the carload.

One of the means of explaining tuberculosis testing and of emphasizing its need is by showing of special moving picture films developed by the United States department of agriculture The first if these, "Out of the Shadows" was furnished to hundreds of meeting of farmers in all parts of the state by the extension service of Iowa State college. Three prints of the latest film "Clean Herds and Hearts" have been obtained by the extension department which are now being used by county agents in farm bureau and other meetings.

Nearly one-seventh of all the cattle in the United States, approximatly 10,000,000 are now said to be under supervision for tuberculosis testing and although nearly one half million are being tested monthly, the waiting list is increasing. Nearly 2,500,000 cattle were reported to be on the waiting list last March 1.

The Power Behind The Savings Dollar

By WILLIAM E. KNOX

President American Bankers Association

A recent compilation made by the Savings Bank Division of the American Bankers Association showed that in the six years since the war our total savings deposits have risen from $11,600,000,000 to nearly $21,000,000,000, an increase of some $9,400,000,000. The total number of savings depositors is reported at about 38,900,000.

William E. Knox

The full significance of this is realized only when we visualize savings deposits as meaning much more than merely dollars in the banks. They really mean an increase in the accumulated productive capital of the country, since money deposited in the banks as savings is promptly applied by the bankers in the purchase of securities by which plant, railroad and other industrial development is made possible. These figures mean, therefore, that the small savings of many millions of people, instead of being frittered away in the purchase of goods that are immediately consumed which involves a destruction of capital, are gathered together and applied in the better utilization of capital through the upbuilding of industrial equipment. This means the preservation and perpetuation of the country's physical wealth and its application to the production of further wealth more easily and in larger volume, resulting in a higher standard of living for all classes in the country.

These tremendous savings figures indicate sound habits of thought and practice on the part of millions of people in their personal economic affairs. This is an asset of no small value in appraising our present business outlook. It is, in fact, one of the most promising elements in the situation today. It means that we not only have the resources for prosperity, but also enough common sense to make good use of them.

What They Remark and What They Really Mean

Nearly all adversse criticism means, "I could have done it much better."

All praise of the gushing variety means, "I couldn't have done better myself."

"Please criticize this work for me," usually means, "Please give this the once-over and then praise me."

"Please don't observe too closely, for the house is in a frightful state" usually means, "Take a look and see if you can find any dust."

"I didn't have time to do my hair" usually means, "I think it arranged very becomingly and you are invited to share my opinion."

"I am not half good enough for you" means, "Please assure me that you consider it an honor to be courted by a man of my excellence."

"The common people are half-baked idiots" means, "The common people haven't sense enough to appreciate me."

"Hurrah for Brown" means "Brown's opinions are similar to mine, which is sufficient evidence that he is a good and wise man."

"I had few advantages as a boy" means, "Haven't I accomplished wonders for one so handicapped at the start?"

"I'll be glad to introduce you to any of these people" means, "Make a note of the fact that I am on intimate terms with all of these big guys."—Baltimore Sun.

Continue Search for "Lost" Arizona Mines

Of all the legends of buried treasure the most persistent is the one about lost gold mines of Arizona. Only the Indians are supposed to possess the secret of this baffling mystery, although the story has been circulated for more than a century.

That there once were mines in the region is indicated by references found in early Spanish diaries and by the tales passed down through several generations of natives who were compelled to dig the ore as slaves of their conquerors. The chief evidence in support of the tradition is the altar of the San Xavier mission, not far from Tucson. It is described as being "inlaid with virgin gold." Mission records show that the precious metal was brought from Canada del Oro where it was mined by Indians under the direction of Spanish priests.

But no trace now exists of the diggings, and the old trail over which the gold is said to have been carried by pack mules disappears abruptly in the sands.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Beauties of Nature

It may be observed that what we call beauty of nature is mainly negative beauty; that is, the mass, the huge rude background, made up of rocks, trees, hills, mountains, plains, water, has not beauty as a positive character, visible to all eyes, but affords the mind the conditions of beauty, namely, health, strength, fitness, etc., beauty being an experience of the beholder. Some things, on the other hand, as flowers, foliage, brilliant colors, sunsets, rainbows, waterfalls, may be said to be beautiful in and of themselves; but how wearisome the world would be without the vast negative background upon which these things figure and which provokes and stimulates the mind in a way the purely fair forms do not!—John Burroughs.

How He Accomplished It

Sir Eric Geddes once remarked that before doubting any statement a man may make, no matter how seemingly incredible it sounds, one should be quite sure as to its precise meaning.

In order to illustrate his contention he went on to instance the case of a friend of his who knew a little about billiards and chess, and who told him one day that he had beaten the amateur champions of England at both games.

Sir Eric expressed great surprise and some incredulity, but the other persisted that his statement was quite true.

"You see," he explained, "I took on the champion billiard player at chess, of which he knew nothing, and I played the champion chess player at billiards, of which he knew less."

ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF ARTHUR KUCK

The entire community of New Knoxville was shocked early this morning at the announcement of the death of Herman Henry Arthur Kuck, which came suddenly at 2:30 this morning, April 8, 1925. Mr. Kuck had spent the day at the Grand reservoir fishing and had returned apparently in the best of health. He retired early in the evening and a few hours later Mrs. Kuck was awakened by moans from her husband and thinking he was dreaming she tried to arouse him. When her efforts were in vain she quickly flashed on the light and was horrified to find her husband in a dying condition. She quickly summoned a physician who found life extinct on his arrival. The cause of his passing was due to the bursting of a blood vessel in the head.

Mr. Kuck was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kuck, and was born in Washington township and had reached the age of 37 years, 8 months and 24 days. He was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Swartz of Iowa, and after a brief residence in that state he returned to New Knoxville where they have since made their home. He was a veteran of the late World War and often related many interesting experiences during his service.

Beside the widow there is one daughter, Miss Eugenia, his aged father and three brothers and two sisters namely John E. Kuck and H. W. Kuck, of New Knoxville, Henry Kuck Jr. Lso Angeles Calif., Mrs. George Haberkamp and Mrs. George Lutterbeck of New Knoxville.

Mr. Kuck was well and favorably known in New Knoxville and vicinity and his untimely passing cas cast a gloom of sadness over the entihe community. He was confirmed in the Reformed church in that village and took an active part in the affairs of the village. The Aeglaise Republican, Wapakoneta, O.

IODINE HELPS PREVENT GOITRE
"Iodized Salt" is Safest Method of Administering to Humans

Iodine is an important element in animal nutrition, but it is needed in very small quantities, says A. R. Lamb, chief in nutrition, Iowa agricultural experiment station. Like some drugs, a little is valuable, but too much is dangerous to health.

Considerable interest has been aroused by recent magazine articles on the subject, reporting remarkable results in the prevention and cure of goitre in school children. Many inquiries concerning iodine have been directed to the experiment station at Ames.

The proper developement of the thyroid glands requires a small amount of iodine. Sucessful reproduction, better gains, and prevention of goitre, which sometimes causes serious trouble, are best promoted by supplying iodine to the breeding stock. In certain localities serious losses are caused by the farrowing of dead and hairless pigs and "bigneck-ed" calves and lambs. To prevent such losses and produce the most healthy animals and the best producers proper feeding must start with the breeding stock. Iodine is only one of the necessary factors, but to insure against a possible deficiency it is well to all a little to the ration.

As to the best method of feeding it is not satisfactory to add the potassium iodine to the farm water supply as it is easily possible in this way to furnish too much iodine under usual conditions. Serious losses among the lambs of the experiment station flock of ewes were caused during one season by the experimental addition of too much potassium iodine to the ration during the gestation period.

It is probably better to mix one-third ounce of potassium iodide with 100 pounds of mineral mixture fed to the stock, or about one grain per week to a sheep or hog. For the family the safest procedure probably is the use of one of the brands of "iodized salt" which are now on the market, and which contain 0.02 percent potassium iodide. This is probably enough to take care of a possible deficiency and prevent goitre.

While the salt mixture for the family is being corrected, the addition of calcium phosphate should be considered. The average American diet is far more likely to be deficient in lime than in vitamins. This may be supplied by adding 5 to 10 percent of calcium phosphate to the salt or by mixing about 10 grains with the food of each person daily. This is particularly important for mothers and children.

The Reward of Carelessness

Many fine homes have been lost to lightning merely because rodding was one of the things their owners *were going to do "some day."

Loss of your home may be the reward of similar carelessness.

The DODD System of Lightning Protection makes loss by lightning impossible and is so guaranteed in writing.

The cost? Nothing compared with the possible saving.

Let's talk about it.

THE Johnston Pressed Gear Lawn Mower

Cuts Clean as a Pair of Shears

A real grass-cutter — that's the Johnston All-Steel Lawn Mower. It leaves your lawn in perfect trim.

Crucible steel blades working against a die-steel bed knife give the Johnston its wonderful cutting ability. It never bites or tears off the grass. Every grass blade is sheared off as clean as you would clip a piece of paper.

You need not be a mechanic to keep the Johnston in perfect working order. The blades are self-sharpening, always keen. The bed-knife can be quickly raised or lowered. Play in the blade reel is eliminated by a simple cone adjustment.

Johnston gears are pressed steel, case hardened. Dust proof casings keep them free from grit.

The slightest turn of a screw at each side of the mower raises or lowers the bed-knife. Makes it easy to adjust cutting blades to bed-knife.

Remember these points about the Johnston: It's all steel, wears and works well for years. Gears are pressed steel, absolutely accurate, won't break. And it is the easiest running mower. You don't push it, you guide it.

The best way to judge the Johnston is to run it. We'll gladly bring one out to you some evening and let you try it on your own lawn.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected, is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.

Renshaw Takes Charge.

Despite Stanley's advice and the dawn that peered at him as he went to bed, Renshaw was up at seven the next morning. He had not slept well. He had tried to sleep, knowing that the coming day might be a strenuous one. But his thoughts whirled like leaves in an autumn blast. Though connected mental effort was impossible, he could not cease thinking. In the fitful naps to which his exhaustion finally succumbed, his dreams were as unrestful as his thoughts. He was wandering through dark labyrinths. He was laboriously ascending desolate mountain paths. He was lost and confused in crowds. And never once did he have a definite objective. That realization, when he took it in upon awakening, disturbed him most of all. Not even his subconscious processes, he told himself, were yet normal.

He felt better after a cold plunge, and when he entered the dining room he showed no outward effects of the strain of the night. Both Jenks and James were in the room, standing by the sideboard and talking in low tones. Renshaw had detoured to the left wing on his way down stairs, and had tapped at the door to ask news of the patient, receiving from the nurse the stock report of the average sick room: the patient was "resting comfortably."

He returned the respectful greetings of the two servants, and approached with zest the adventure of examining the hot dishes on the sideboard. While he was helping himself to omelet and bacon, the two physicians bustled into the dining room. They were obviously in exuberant spirits. Morris, indeed, wore the uplifted look of a modest man honored beyond his deserts, and Stanley was vain enough to be pleased as well as mildly amused by the awe with which his country colleague regarded him. Both greeted the secretary with cordiality, into which Stanley now infused something of the personal interest due to a protege. They filled their plates like hungry schoolboys.

"Campbell's going to be all right," Stanley predicted, in response to Renshaw's first question, as he returned to the table and sat down. "Can't kill that old boy. He's determined to sing hymns at my funeral. By the way, it was only for a few seconds that he recovered consciousness, I think you said?"

"Yes, just about that," Renshaw answered. "He seemed very anxious to say something, and finally he brought it out."

"Just what was it, again?"

"He instructed me in three words to take charge here."

Renshaw was glad to have this point developed, and especially in the presence of the two servants. That there might be no mistake about the matter, he clinched his case by adding casually, "Miss Campbell and I were alone with him at the time."

"Is that all he said?" Stanley, who had stopped eating for a moment, fell zestfully upon some sausages.

"He had very hard work to bring that out. He drifted off again as soon as my reply showed that I understood. The effort had exhausted him."

"H'm-m. Well, that's all right."

Just what was all right Stanley did not specify. Probably it was the sausages.

"I'm going back to town this morning," he added in another tone. "This pneumonia epidemic is keeping me uncomfortably busy. But I'll run out again tomorrow afternoon, anyway—and of course if there's any change I'll come at once. Meantime Doctor Morris will be right here on the job. We've decided that he'd better make Tawno Ker his headquarters for a day or so, till we're sure the patient is on the mend. We don't want to take any chances. I suppose you can make him comfortable?"

"Of course. It will be a great relief to have him here."

Renshaw spoke with unusual heartiness. It would be good to have the simple but agreeable personality of Morris in the house, and in more ways than one.

After breakfast he went with Jenks to the left wing to look over Morris' quarters and to assure himself the comfort he had promised was available.

"Jenks," he said, after being satisfied about that, "I wish you would give me an idea of the domestic routine here. Who, for example, orders the meals?"

"Miss Campbell, sir. She writes the menus for the day every morning, and gives them to me."

"You do the ordering and marketing?"

"Yes, sir, mostly by telephone. We have a large store room, well supplied, and a hamper comes from New York once a week."

"It's odd the ladies don't have a personal maid." Renshaw was speaking more to himself than to the servant.

"It does seem odd, sir," Jenks acquiesced. "But Mrs. Pardee can't get on with one, sir, and Miss Verity won't have one alone, down here in the country. She says it isn't worth while. The foreign lady,"—for some reason Jenks steadfastly refused to force his tongue to a contest with the name of Hvoeslef—"she has a nurse for the little girl; a sour creature she is, too, sir; and she don't speak a word of English. But she runs in and out of Madame's room a good deal and helps her to dress for dinner."

Renshaw checked these personal revelations.

"So We-wee belongs to Madame Hvoeslef?" he mused.

"Miss Wanda? Yes, sir. She appears to be her grandchild."

"The halls and bedrooms are looked after by Annie?" Renshaw had returned to practical details.

"Yes, sir." Jenks hesitated, then made his plunge with an almost perceptible gulp of distaste: "Anything you wish changed, sir?"

"Certainly not. I merely want to get a clear idea of the routine and working force. There's no one else that I haven't seen or heard of?"

"No one but the cook, sir. She's Jane Dawkins—an Englishwoman."

"I thought the cook was English, from the breakfasts. They're all right, too," Renshaw hastened to add, recalling the ample justice he had done to the three he had eaten.

Jenks was looking relieved. "There's another young person in the kitchen, sir," he remembered. "She washes dishes and assists the cook. She's what we'd call a scullery maid in England, sir. Her name," he added thoughtfully, "is Violet."

"She's a modest Violet; I didn't even know of her existence." Renshaw spoke absently. His mind was on Jenks' penultimate sentence. "So you're English, too?"

"I was born in England, sir; but I've been in America a good many years." The manner of Jenks returned to normal. "Any orders, sir?"

"None whatever."

Jenks faded away, and Renshaw descended to the lower floor and turned toward the study. The duty nearest his hand was to open the morning mail and reply to that part of it which required attention. Also, he desired to have a private talk with Stanley before he left.

But, instead of doing these things, he equipped himself with a coat and cap in the convenient hall closet and strolled out of the house. He would smoke an after-breakfast cigar first of all.

He joined Stanley just as that gentleman was stepping into his car.

"Suppose you send the machine down to the road and let me walk to the gate with you," Renshaw suggested. "There are one or two things I'd like to ask you about."

"All right. I wondered where you were." The physician motioned to his chauffeur, and the car went on ahead of them.

"The first thing I want to ask," said Renshaw, going straight to his point as the two walked down the long driveway, "is what you meant by warning me that there was an unusual condition of things at Tawno Ker. Now that I'm in charge here, and the owner is helpless, I think I ought to know what those conditions are—especially as they may have had something to do with Campbell's stroke."

Stanley shook his head.

"Not a bit of it," he said brusquely. "Besides, they're all over now; and they didn't amount to much in the first place, except to one person."

"May I ask what they were?"

"Of course. There's no reason why you shouldn't know. Campbell himself would have told you, no doubt, in a day or two. I suppose he had promised Madame Hvoeslef—that isn't her name, by the way—to say nothing until the material was safe with the Trust company. She's the mystery-maker, you know; and she has oozed mystery from the moment she entered the house."

"I've noticed that."

"Of course you have. Who could help noticing it? Well, what it all means is simply this: Madame Hvoeslef, as she chooses to call herself just now, is a very great personage in her native land, and her husband was a very great man there. He spent the last years of his life writing his memoirs. Those memoirs are very intimate and personal. They concern history and thrones and wearers of crowns. And the author's august master, shaking on his own tottering throne, didn't want them published. When the author died, the widow was offered a fortune for the manuscript. She refused the fortune, knowing it meant that the manuscript would be destroyed, and that her husband's greatest wish was to have it published. Then efforts were made to steal it—rather desperate efforts, from all I've heard. To save the material she fled with it to this country, in disguise and under an assumed name."

"Humph!" observed Renshaw without enthusiasm.

"She was traced to New York by agents of the august master," Stanley went on placidly. "According to her story and evident conviction, their orders were to get that manuscript and all those invaluable historic letters and documents at any cost. Her very life was in danger. In fact, two attempts were made on it in Europe. She knew Verity Campbell, so when she arrived Verity went to New York and brought her and her grandchild and the nurse back here in the dead of night.

"Since then, Madame Hvoeslef claims, several queer-looking foreigners have been lurking around Tawno Ker. All the men servants have been warned and put on guard against trouble. When Madame Hvoeslef continued to see and hear things outside the house every night—faces at the windows and figures in the trees, and all that stuff—the strain on the family nerves became too great. I persuaded Campbell to get her to send the material to the Trust company, and we chose you for the job because no one would think you would be our choice."

No one would think he would be their choice! Renshaw took this in silence and digested it, but it did not disturb him.

"A big publishing firm is buying the world rights to the stuff for fifty thousand dollars," Stanley went on. "The contract is to be signed in a few days. It's a mighty good thing for the charming Madame Hvoeslef, since it's all she has left. She belonged to the reigning family, and her uprising countrymen have recently confiscated her estates. She can go to France or Switzerland now, and live on the income of her fifty thousand."

They had reached the store gateway, where the limousine was waiting. The old doctor held out his hand.

"But," Renshaw objected, as he took it, "all this being so, it doesn't explain in the least the things I've noticed."

"What have you noticed?" Stanley asked the question over his shoulder, with a foot on the running-board of the car. It was not a moment for confidences, even if Renshaw had intended to make them. However, he would see what else he could draw out.

"Oh, odd noises and lights, and that sort of thing," he said carelessly. "But inside the house—not outside. And I understood from Mr. Campbell that everything inside the house was all right."

Stanley entered the car and shrugged himself into the big fur-lined overcoat that lay waiting for him on the back seat.

"The servants," he explained. "I told you they were on the watch. They didn't know what for, of course. They were just ordered to keep their eyes open and their mouths shut. But you can imagine how skillful they'd be in pussy-footing around—every man fancying himself an amateur detective. Probably they've been trying to arrest one another," he ended, with a chuckle.

Renshaw had one more question:

"Is that all you know—and all that you and Mr. Campbell meant by what you said?"

"Absolutely all. It's enough, too. You don't find a lost princess guarding historic memoirs every day. Where's your imagination? Madame Hvoeslef is a very great lady, and that baby I hear you've fallen in love with has royal blood in her veins. No one else took the thing as hard as Madame Hvoeslef did, of course," he went on more thoughtfully, "but no one can blame her for being melodramatic. She has lost her country, her family, her fortune, and all but lost her life over those memoirs. They are vital to her, whatever they may seem to the rest of us. Now I'm off. The nurse will telephone me twice a day, and Morris has a lot of sense. Good-by."

People Today Longer Lived

The English races are healthier and longer-lived than famous ancient peoples, such as the Egyptians and Romans, says the New York World. And American descendants of European parents are, on the average, bigger and taller than their fathers and mothers, according to Dr. F. C. Shrubsall.

Stature and weight today, he said, are not less than in the days of Agincourt or Waterloo. Modern civilized man is decidedly not deteriorating. Our expectation of life is far greater than ever before. The fossilized bones of the earliest human beings indicate that our most ancient ancestors seldom lived beyond the early adult stage. Mummy cases in Egypt show that an Egyptian child of five years might expect to live to be only thirty-five. A five-year-old child of Rome under the Caesars could expect a life of only twenty-nine years. But a child of five living in present-day London or New York can expect to live to be at least sixty-four years old.

Indebted to Americans

A newspaper correspondent who had been staying at Stratford says that one day he asked his aged landlady: "Who is this Shakespeare, of whom one hears so much in this town? Was he a very great man?" Whereupon the lady made reply as follows: "Lor', sir, when I was a girl he wasn't thought nothing on. It's the Americans as has made him wot he is."

Charge That Americans Neglect Their Gardens

Americans, charged by Europeans with a disregard of things artistic, are guilty on one count at least, according to Ralph R. Root, president of the Society of Landscape Architects and chairman of the landscape and garden committee of the Chicago fifth annual "Own Your Home" exposition, who states that Americans are neglecting their gardens.

"Every year there are fewer and fewer gardens planted, particularly the flower garden, that is fast dying in this country. Years ago many Americans beautified their towns as well as their homes with lovely gardens, though we never showed the interest that Europeans, particularly the English people, take in their little plots of ground.

"In England the poorest shack of a house has its carefully kept rose garden, and the English countryside in the spring is a real fairyland of beauty.

"We have forgotten the charm of flower gardens and in an effort to reinterest the public in the importance of this phase of home ownership, old-fashioned English rose gardens will be planted at the national "Own Your Home" expositions to be held this year in Chicago, New York city, Philadelphia and Buffalo.

Work for Improvement of the Rural School

A campaign to bring the problem of the small rural school prominently before the legislatures of 42 states is expected to effect definite improvement in rural school standards, according to an announcement by the United States bureau of education.

Many new laws pertaining to schools are pending. Among these, educational leaders are laying particular stress upon the need for laws exacting higher qualifications for teachers' certificates and standardization of small one, two and three-teacher schools.

Reports to the bureau of education indicate that the supply of teachers is now more nearly adequate to fill the demand than for many years, and that the time is opportune for more stringent regulation of teacher certification.

"The emergency is now over and disregard of professional standards is no longer necessary," it is declared by the bureau. High school enrollment has increased during the last ten years in an unprecedented manner. There are plenty of high school graduates anxious to prepare themselves to be teachers.

Find That Beauty Pays

Where villages are being made more beautiful, the impetus has come in nearly every case from local initiative. Villages that have well-planned streets, attractive recreation spots, and pleasing approaches are nearly always indebted for these advantages to the energy and public spirit of some small group of citizens. Under such inspiration dump heaps have been turned into garden spots, unsightly shacks and dilapidated stores have been torn down and replaced by smart, substantial business buildings, and extensive programs of landscape gardening and tree planting have been undertaken.

Villages that have embarked on this path are finding that beauty pays. It improves local business and attracts tourist business. It enhances real estate values, and has a powerful influence in raising individual standards of efficiency and enterprise.

And, besides, you do not want to remain where you are not wanted. Worth All It Costs

The American town, as a rule, is ugly, thrown together in piecemeal, without regard to beauty in the unit or harmony in the groupings. It is interesting to note that the Department of Agriculture is endeavoring to stimulate a keener interest in the beautification of American villages. It is all worth while. It is quite feasible. The cost is small compared with the returns. Even inexpensive houses may be made pretty in design.

Frivolous Oldsters

Two eighty-year-old men in Vienna, Austria, who were bobbing for apples at a party given for employees of a shop became engaged in a fierce fight over the game. One of the elderly men claimed that his opponent was using his beard to snare the apple in the tub. Police were called to stop the quarrel.

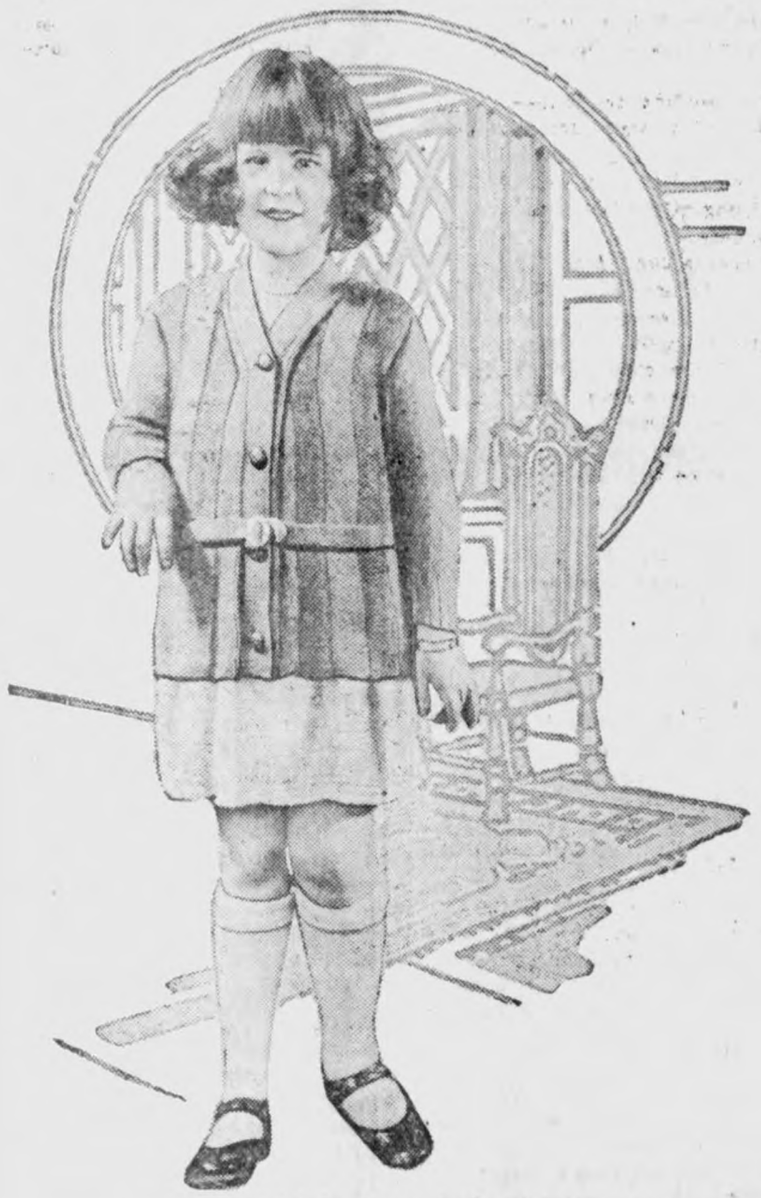
GAY JUVENILE SWEATERS; TUNIC MODES FROM PARIS

WHEN mother slips the wee little folks' arms into sweater sleeves, no doubt she is thinking "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure"—which sounds very serious and prosaic until one views the sweaters which are designed for tots this season. Then prose becomes poetry, for they are having a time of glorified color in juvenile sweaterdom this season. Of course if one insists on browns and tans, they are there for the choosing, but what's the use in selecting a dull-toned sweater for little daughter when there are such lovely pinky beiges to be had in the knitted outerwear sections, or hennas with a decided rose tinge, cockscomb red and hosts of charming blues?

Little girls' dresses knitted in shell stitch with a flared ruffle below the hipline are designed in effective pastel colorings.

Happy the woman of fashion who adds a French blouse or two to her spring and summer collection. That artful baffling simplicity which is a peculiar gift of the French couturier is bespoken to a degree of extreme chic in each of the blouses portrayed. The model to the left is a Callot inspiration. There is the inimitable artistry of genius in its every detail. Stone gray georgette is the selected medium. Especially is the yoke unique in that it drops sufficiently to suggest a shallow decollette, bringing itself back to practical aspect by means of a band of the fabric which defines a conservative neckline. Then, too, the draped hemline, confined at one side under a tasseled medallion motif, suggests an entirely new line of thought.



Glorified Color Reigns in Sweaters.

Many points of interest are accentuated by Jeanne Lanvin in the companion blouse, in that the much heralded epaulet shoulders are featured, also the modish V-neck and particularly the slashed tabs which, while they afford escape from the tyranny of an all-too-narrowness, score a double victory in that they suggest the popular flare tendency. A discreet use of embroidery is evidenced on shoulder and tabs of this tunic blouse.

This decorative note is oft repeated on the import blouse. Crepe de chine and georgette serve as background for fine needlework in colored yarns.

Perhaps the outstanding feature in the newer blouses is their extreme length. Sometimes only a few inches of the slip shows below. Jabots, flares, and buttons, also long silken necktles, are tunic headlights.

Flower-patterned prints are favored for the informal tunic, having cascades of white georgette or rippling jabots.

Striped tub silk is recommended for the practical blouse, especially to be worn with the smart cloth tailleur.

Showing Yoke and Epaulet Shoulders.

idea, novelty brushed wool caps are designed to match children's cardigans, jerseys and brushed wool knicker suits. In these, also color plays a pleasing part in such combinations as saxe, fawn and white; putty, green and white; applegreen and fawn; orange and yellow.

Brushed wool cardigans in rainbow effects are part of the small folks' knitted outerwear collection.

Fanciful touches on sweaters and knitted tunics for children stress tassels of the wool, with lacings up the front. Novelty sweater types have scalloped collars, and hemline, the same bound with plain knit rayon. The pearl buckle which clasps the knitted belt on the sweater in the picture adds a decorative note in many instances.

SNAP JUDGMENT

How prone we are to size up men by some cheap sample we have known! A man with whiskers swipes a hen, and we remark, with bitter groan, "We have no use for any guys who wear alfalfa on their maps; all moral precepts they despise, they're dissolute and godless, perhaps . It isn't safe to give your fowls their liberty at any time while there are men with whiskered jowls intent on standard brands of crime." Yet there are men with flowing beards who walk the paths of righteousness, like gentlemen they dree their weirds, and crime to them give deep distress One gent who wears a stovepipe hat and priceless diamonds on his wig, sells us a costly Maltest cat that proves to be a Berkshire pig. We see that we are stung again, and pillaged are our treasure chests, and thoughts of peace, good will to men are banished from our aching chests We cry, our belfries full of bats, "These stovepipe lids betoken guile; all delegates who wear such hats should rot in prison for a while." Yet good men wear upon their dome the sort of bonnets we detest; their hearts are pure, their lives are pomes, they always strive to do their best. It is not safe to judge a crowd by what some erring wight may do; men may with virtue be endowed although they neither smoke or chew. It is not safe because some skate has trimmed us in a deal in wheat, to say that men are never great who wear red neckties on the street.—Walt Mason.

MASSACRE SITE IS NOW HIGHWAY

Historical Pioneer Spot Recently Located

Arnolds Park, The automobiles of 1925 are now speeding over the ground where Indians once sneaked in search of white man's scalps as the result of widening the streets here The site of the old Mattock cabin, in which eleven persons were murdered in a pioneer day was recently located during excavations and is now wholly in the road.

The cabin originally stood a few rods away from the present Milwaukee right of way. Here James Mattock, his wife and five children, Joseph Mattison and Dr. Herriot with two others were massacred by the Indians. They were later buried by their friends near the cabin.

Mrs. Abigail Gardner Sharp always contended that others had perished in the flames of the cabin after it had been fired by the savages, as she heard the shrieks of one or more while she was tied captive to a tree nearby.

In 1894 the bones of the victims, with those of others that could be found around the lake were buried by the side of the monument erected by the state to those who perished in the massacre.

MARATHON BIBLE READING

Parishioners of a New York church have achieved the distinction of reading the Bible through in one day. The two hundred members set aside the day and partjcapated, starting at 3 a. m. and finishing in triumph at 8 p. m.

Statisticians have found that to do this the New Yorkers had to maintain an average of 700 words a minute. Figuratively, this speed is the speed of the 250 miles an hour airplane against the fastest train known to man. Charles Swem ,fastest stenographer, can't take dictation as fast as 300 words a minute.

The purpose of its isn't to cast doubt on the accompolishment. Church folk wouldn't prevaricate about it. As a matter of fact a Pennsylvania congregation last year did the same thing, but didn't finish it such Finish time.

The whole point is that ripping through the Scriptures at such a speed would scarcely give readers or hearers much of what the geat Book holds for those who study it dilligently. It would be far more to the credit of the church in question if it could obtain from every member an affidavit to the effect that he or she had perused the Bible from cover to cover within the past year. Then make them prove it by reciting a verse or two from every book.—Mason City Globe Gazette.

Hog Bungalows

Encourage Large Families

It will soon be a critical time for Mrs. Hog, her new family and their owner.

What she will need most is the privacy and shelter of an individual hog house, where she will not be disturbed or excited. Why let the little pigs get infected by letting them run in the old lot?

Build her a hog bungalow. She will pay good rent. One extra pig saved will pay for the investment.

See our improved individual hog houses, already built. They encourage large families, and their small cost will please you. It's important—don't gamble with the pig crop —get busy on that hog bungalow today.

The pig crop is short. Prices for hogs are bound to be high.

CAREFUL PLANTING NEEDED

Tree Tops Also Should be Cut Back When Newly Set Out

Proper planting precautions will avoid much loss in young orchards which are being set out this spring. Failure to cut back the stock is one of the most common mistakes.

When the tree is dug upat the nursery, two thirds or more of the roots are removed, so that when the tree is set out, from 60 to 75 percent of the top should be cut off to restore the proper balance beween roots and the top. At the same time the larger roots should be shortened slightly and all the damaged roots removed.

Dig the hole large enough so that the roots may spread out naturally and deep enough so the tree when set out will be about two inches lower than it grew at the thenrsery.Manure if necessary should be thoroly mixed with the soil. Avoid getting a large quantity a large quantity of manure near or under the tree as it is apt to heat or shut off the water supply of the tree. Use top soil about the raots of the tree and tamp well. Watering will not be necessary unless the bround is quite dry.

PROSPECTS FOR ABUMPER FRUIT CROP

Des Moines, Iowa, April, 23,—"Everything points toward a bumper fruit crop in Iowa this year," states R. S. Herrick of the Iowa Horticultural Society, in a report to the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

"In fact," states Mr. Herrick, "a light frost would be more beneficial than detrimental to the fruit as the apple trees are heavily loaded with fruit buds. Cold, wet weather during the blooming season might cause a heavy June drop on account of lack of cross pollination.

Lack of thorough spraying will do much more harm than a light frost. The first spray of the year should be applied in most parts of the state immediately. The second spray should be applied just after the petals fall.

INVENTS NEW MOTOR

B. K. Bowen Gets Patent on New Type of Auto Engine

A representative of one of the leading auto manufacturers of Detroit was in Hampton last week consulting B. K. Bowen in regard to his new type of internal combustion engine which he has just recently received a patent from the United States patent office.

The new engine, which was described in the Chronicle some time ago, will interest motorists because of its extreme lightness an dsimplicity, absence of vibration and noises and economy in operation. Unlike the present type of automobile enating in each cylinder. The connection rods are not directly connected to the crank shaft, but are connected to cross arms which run in slides. To the cross arms rollers are attached which run in groves on round cams rigidly connected to the power shaft to which is also attached the fly wheel. The rollers running in grooves applies the greatest leverage principle found in the jack screw, or the twist drill, to internal combustion engines.

Mr. Bowen has had the patent pending on this new engine for some time, but has been taking his time perfecting the new invention until he was satisfied that it was complete in every detail. Mr. Bowen has been head mechanic and plumber for the Elliot Plumbing Company of this city for several years past, and has handled some large contracts for the firm in a very satisfactory manner. His associates all state that he has proven to be a genius in a mechanical way.

Mr. Bowen refused a tempting offer for his new ptent which was made to him by the Detroit man here last week, and for the present does not expect to relinquish ownership of the patent. It is understood that local men will become interested with him, and it may be that they will start the manufacture of these engines and contract for the sale direct to some large automobile company.—Hampton Chronicle.

BLOATING CAUSES BIG LOSS

Wet Grasses are Especially Harmful to Livestock

Bloating of cattle turned out on clover pastures, particularly sweet clover, resulted in heavy losses to many Iowa farmers last year. This trouble is especially likely to appear following late backward springs, when grass starts quickly and grows very fresh and rank.

When cattle eat this fresh grass very rapidly, fermentation is apt to take place in the rumen, giving rise to the gas which causes the bloat. Wet grass is especially dangerous. The direct cause of death from bloating is most commonly due to suffocation caused by the pressure of the rumen on the diaphragm, which prevents breathing. It may also may also cause rupture of the rumen or stomach. Death from bloating occurs in from 30 minutes to three or four hours.

Preventive measures are the best insurance against loss. Avoid turning cattle on clover pastures while the grass is wet from rain or dew. Avoid turning cattle on fresh grass when they are hungry. Give them a fill of blue grass or dry feed just before turning them on clover. Driving them about for some time after turning them out will help, by keeping them from eating too fast. Even when pastures are not wet, it is poor practice to salt cattle heavily before turning them out for they are in danger of drinking a large amount of water after taking a fill of grass which often produces bloating.

SPRAY WHEN BUDS ARE PINK

Destroys Scab and Also Host of Insect Pests

Growers who wish to produce fancy apples should spray the trees when the blossom cluster buds show pink. This is one of the important sprays for the prevention of scab, according to Dr. B. B. Fulton, entomologist, Iowa State College. It also destroys a host of caterpillars that are developing on the young leaves and which will later attack the fruit. These include the bud moth, leaf rollers, canker worms, and green fruit worms. The spray should contain two and one half gallons of lime sulpher and two pounds of lead arsenatè to 100 gallons. Dilute the lime sulphur and add the lead arsenate while the agitator is running.

The same materials are used for the next period of spraying which is applied when 95 per cent of the petals have fallen. This spray also controls scab, but is timed primarily for the codling moth or apple worm. Most of the young worms. which will hatch a few weeks later, will find their way into the calyx cavity and then bore into the apple. It is important to get some lead arsenate into this cavity before the calyx lobes and the stamens close it up.

The spray should be towards the ends of the blossoms. A fine misty spray with plenty of force is the best.

Britt-Crystal Lake Road to be Graveled

The road from Britt to Crystal Lake is to be graded and graveled this season. County Engineer Merten and Supervisors Lawhorn, Oxley and Christensen were at Ames Monday to confer with members of the Highway commision regarding the work. They were assured that blue prints of the road would be here this week, and then the board can proceed to let the contract for grading and graveling. This is probably the most prominent road in the county that has been given little or no attention, and the improvment is much needed. When this work is cared for there should be some work done in the Corwith neighborhood and then we would have good roads connecting all the towns in the county.—Garner Signal.

BULGARIA FEARS NEW REVOLUTION

Reds Bomb Church During General's Funeral—Many Killed and Hurt.

Sofia.—The ancient Cathedral of Sveti Kral (the Saint King) was the scene of a terrible outrage. The Bulgarian cabinet and hundreds of other notables were assembled at the funeral of General Georghieff, who was assassinated Tuesday night, when bombs exploded, wrecking the building.

Rescuing parties have taken numerous bodies out of the ruins. Several of the cabinet ministers were wounded.

It is the general belief that this outrage, the attack on King Boris Tuesday and the murder of General Georghieff constitute an attempt to provoke a communist revolution.

An attempt was made Tuesday to assassinate King Boris of Bulgaria as he was motoring near Sofia and the king narrowly escaped death. That night General Georghieff was assassinated in the streets of the capital. These attacks were the culmination of a long series of disturbances.

Georghieff was one of the leaders in the 1923 revolution which overthrew the Stamboulisky government. The plot was carried out by reserve officers who were assisted by the active army.

Within the last few days the authorities announced they had seized documents showing that an armed revolt was planned for this spring. Communists and anarchists are reported to be unusually active.

These dispatches stated that the revolution was to start in northwestern Bulgaria during April. According to the plans as reported, a campaign of assassination was to be carried out and every effort was to be made to establish a Soviet republic.

U. S. FLEET ON WAY TO ATTACK HAWAII

High-Ranking Officers to Umpire Game in Islands.

San Francisco.—Departure of the United States steamship Seattle, flagship of the United States fleet, for Hawaii marked the beginning of the exodus of the grand fleet of the United States for the war game in the waters of the island territory. The most extensive and important joint army-navy maneuvers ever held in the Pacific are contemplated.

Although the Seattle carried the four-starred flag of Admiral Robert E. Coontz, commander in chief of the fleet, it has relinquished temporarily its position as flagship of the armada. For the purposes of the maneuvers it is neutral, as it is the umpire ship, carrying the high ranking officers, who will decide "who won the war" in the conflict between the "Blue" fleet and the "Black," or enemy force, which theoretically holds the islands.

Admiral Coontz and Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, chief of staff of the army, are the senior umpires designated by the Navy and War departments to supervise the maneuvers, render judgment after the conclusion of the war game, and make such suggestions or recommendations as may be appropriate.

Capt. William H. Stanley, chief of the war plans division of the navy and member of the joint army and navy board, is the senior umpire for the "Blue" fleet.

Brig. Gen. Leroy Eltinge, assistant chief of staff and director of the war plans division of the army, is the senior umpire for the "Black" force.

The Seattle carried many staff officers of various branches.

The grand fleet proper steamed from the bay under command of Admiral S. S. Robison.

Cave Worker, Trapped in Collins' Tomb, Rescued

WIDOW ADMITS POISONING THREE

Mrs. Cunningham of Hammond Confesses Killing Her Children.

Crown Point, Ind.—In the presence of her seventeen-year-old daughter, Mae, Mrs. Anna Cunningham, prisoner in the Crown Point jail, calmly admitted she had murdered three of her five children with arsenic.

The forty-nine-year old woman also confessed that she had administered the poison with murderous intent to her only surviving son, David, who now is fighting for his life in the Columbus Memorial hospital.

Her account of the killings was given with little show of emotion.

The confession of Mrs. Anna Cunningham, telling of the fatal poisoning of two sons and a daughter, follows:

"Now you listen to me, Mae (the living daughter), I'm going to come clean. I'm done with the whole bunch of you. I didn't try to kill you, Mae. But I did kill the other three.

"I never gave poison to pa—he just died. I didn't give poison to Harry, either. He was my favorite son. He was the one I gave part of the money from the farm to buy an automobile. After Harry and pa were gone my home seemed broken up.

"I gave poison to Isabelle. Isabelle was the first to go. I knew Isabelle was across on the other side—waiting there in heaven for me.

"I gave the poison to Isabelle on bread with butter and give it to myself just as much as her. She was sick a long time.

"Harry died a year later. Maybe I would have sent him on the way if it hadn't been that God took him without any help from me. He died naturally. And that's the truth.

"Next it was Charlie. The same way.

"A year later (in 1923) I gave poison to little Walter on bread. He was ten days and five years old the day he died.

"I took just as much poison myself and I got sick, but I did not die. Eight weeks little Walter was sick. All the time in between I was taking arsenic off and on myself.

"I never gave poison to any one else.

"I would decide to do it when I got those terrible blue spells. All the time I thought about dying. Every once in a while I took some poison, but I could never seem to die."

"Why didn't you kill Mae?" she was asked.

"Mae never told me the truth about things," she continued. "She always came in false. The one I loved the most I would want to take with me. I loved Mae, but not as much as the rest.

"I meant to give myself up to God again and again. I told Mae so. Doctor Watts always was the first one called the minute they got sick. Mae used to leave me alone so much at home—running the streets at night. One night she was out to a dance and didn't come home. I had one of my sinking spells and was all alone in the house for 24 hours.

"No one gave me a chance to get off by myself," she resumed. "There was something the matter with me. I took as much arsenic as they, but I couldn't die."

Cross-Words Nearly Barred

d Close Call From Being isted With Roulette and "Lady Luck."

Washington.—Chance, luck, fortune, spin of the roulette wheel, the of the dice, have fascinated man- form time immemorial. For- es, even life itself, have been ed on the turn of a card or the re- of a horse race. The thrill of a ed-for scoop in the stock market tured untold thousands to ruin and race.

nce the great public games of nce, the Louisiana lotteries, reaped ch harvest from almost every home he land where the price of a ticket available, or could be begged or rowed. For every happy prize win- whose pockets were lined with by the gods of luck, tens of thou- ds of losers suffered bitter disap- tment. Losing only to play again, wing good money after bad, vainly ing for a chance, a smile from for- , a windfall that never came, many ry patrons became confirmed blers. Misery, degradation, sui- , were the milestones of their un- py existences.

Mails Bar All Hazard.

he congress of the United States ded many years ago that the postal vice should not be used for the pro- ion of these lotteries. By legisla- enactment it forbade the carriage he mails of any and all matter per- ing to schemes, either wholly or tially, dependent upon lot or nce.

o law of the United States has been e faithfully executed, none more ily enforced. Every day the Post- e department denies the use of the r to dozens of enterprises having lottery taint. These usually origi- e in or are related to ingenious sales emes. The merchant and sales ager are quite cognizant of the that the public loves to take a nce, play a game or solve a puzzle. ordingly they announce competi- s or contests of a popular kind, and ure immediate attention for their ertising.

he postal lottery laws do not affect uine competitions in which the skill the contestant is the determining or in the distribution of prizes. Ad- isements or other notices of a trap- oting match furnish a typical exam- of this sort of contest. The marks- nship of the competitors decides the ult.

Guessing Contests Popular.

Guessing contests and what are own as gift enterprises are the most ular advertising devices. In the dow of a store appears a large pile of beans, cigarettes or other objects not easily counted en masse. The public, through the press, is invited to guess—at times the word "estimate" is used—the number of such objects on display. The person submitting the correct or most nearly correct figures is, of course, the prize winner. The Post-Office department regards such enterprises as mere lotteries. Guesswork is chance pure and simple.

Another scheme of the same kind is one in which all and sundry are invited to submit an estimate of the distance in miles, yards, feet and inches a particular automobile will travel on one gallon of gasoline. It has been energetically argued that this is a matter of skill exclusively. Bore and stroke and number of cylinders are announced, together with other figures pertaining to the engineering specifications of the car.

Nevertheless a great many additional indeterminate factors enter into the performance of the automobile. Atmospheric and road conditions, ignition efficiency, the skill of the driver, the functional efficiency of every engine part, the grade of gasoline, and a host of other things materially affect the mileage. In all probability no automotive engineer could mathematically determine in terms of miles, yards, feet and inches just how far a car will go on a specified quantity of gas. Almost any one familiar with automobiles may hazard an opinion on the matter, but this is mere guesswork and, consequently, the so-called contest of skill is in fact a lottery. No matter concerning it may pass through the mails.

Gift Enterprises Barred.

Gift enterprises innumerable are constantly being conducted, but not with the aid of the postal service. In most cases each purchaser of an article at a certain store receives a numbered ticket entitling him to a chance in a prize drawing. That this is a lottery needs no demonstration.

In other instances no purchase is necessary. The tickets are given freely to every person visiting a certain store on a certain date or during a specified period. This is a simple but apparently effective form of advertising. However, it seems that under the postal laws this seeming generosity on the part of the merchant does not permit of his mailing circulars or other advertising matter relating to his scheme.

In another form of prize scheme a store displays in its window an eight-day clock which will be given away free as soon as it runs down. The fortunate person who is to receive this valuable timepiece, as the announcements run, will be the one who correctly predicts the exact day, hour, minute and second at which the clock will stop. This proposition resembles the automobile mileage guessing contest and falls in the same category. The element of chance in these schemes is patently the determining factor. Literature relating to them is also barred from the mails.

Glad News About the Cross-Word.

Quite recently the reading public was amused and also a little chagrined by an announcement that cross-word puzzles had been declared nonmailable. It was stated that they were regarded as lotteries, and as such could not be admitted to the mails. Such is not the case. The announcement was incorrect and due to a misunderstanding on the part of the person making it. In the particular case before the Post-Office department at that time, the contest which involved the solving of a cross-word puzzle had additional elements dependent upon chance and consequently came under the ban of the postal lottery laws.

Cross-word puzzle contests are not objectionable if they will stand the acid test of certain simple requirements. The puzzle must be capable of only one correct solution. The definitions by which the contestant is guided must be accurate and not misleading. Furthermore there must be a provision that in the event that more than one person submits a correct solution, a prize of equal value to that originally offered will be awarded to each contestant so qualifying.

Word-building contests are those in which the problem consists in making the greater number of words from a given set of letters. The Post-Office department does not exclude matter relating to these tests of skill and knowledge, provided certain well-defined requirements are complied with. The contest rules must specify whether words spelled alike but with different meanings will be counted as separate words; also whether obsolete words, proper nouns, names of persons and places may be included in the competitor's list.

There must be furnished the name of a dictionary which will be the recognized authority in all cases of dispute. The particular edition to be relied upon, as well as its publication date must be specified. The provisions similar to those prescribed for cross-word puzzle contests are likewise essential.

In a recent competition of this kind the winner compiled a list of approximately 50,000 words made from the letters contained in a comparatively short phrase.

LYERS DEPICT TRADE IN FANTASTIC TERMS

ted States Army Air Service Has Developed a Vocabulary All Its Own.

Washington.—The army air service, on which the congressional spotlight s recently played with brilliancy, has eloped a vocabulary all its own. An air service officer who can't fly popularly known as a "keewee," m the arctic bird with undeveloped gs. When one becomes confused conversation he is referred to as be- in a "flat spin." "Ground flying" notes conversation concerning flying. hen a speaker at a banquet orates undue length an air service hint to to "land" is to place two matches form a T, representati.e of a plane's titudes.

"Ceiling" Is Highest Point

"Ceiling" is the highest point an air- ft can reach, depending on its horse- wer and the air density. "Washed out" is the army aviator's designation for getting killed, and "cracked up" means a wrecked plane in which the pilot might not be dead. "Archie" is an endearing term that army flyers have for all anti-aircraft artillery.

Any particular design of aircraft is known as a "job," the propeller being termed the "prop." "Give 'er the gun" is the air equivalent of stepping on the gas to speed up. To "set down" is to land, but when the flyer tries to run parallel to the ground beyond the conventional landing height and falls a few feet in his intentional descent to mother earth, he is said "to pancake."

Nicknames of Training Planes.

A "hisso" is a training plane equipped with a Hispano-Suiza motor. A "Jenny" is a training plane of the JN type. To "take off" is to get into the air, and a "hop" is a short flight. A "barrel roll" is a complete revolution lengthwise. "To zoom" means to climb very sharply for a short period. A "sausage" is a small dirigible or balloon.

To come to the more scientific terms, an "airplane" is sustained by dynamic action, whereas an "aerostat" is an airship or balloon filled with gas lighter than air. The army air service has not developed the "ornithopter," which, bird-like, flaps its wings to aid the machine's flight, considering this type not suited to service needs. It is interested in the development of the "helicopter," capable of rising vertically by a thrust of its propeller. A "glider," which is an airplane without a motor, such as the Wright brothers first learned to fly in, is now being used by the army as a target.

Those Two Boys Chauncey and Will

I JUST saw a nice write up and Chauncey Depew's picture in all the papers where he told of his first watch which was an Elgin. Said he kept it for years and somebody stole it on a New York Central train. (That's what he gets for riding on his own Railroad.) What does he need a watch for anyway, time means nothing to him. He was in The Follies the other day, and I introduced him and made him make a speech, he said, "I have been entertaining audiences for 91 years and have never found it necessary to use a Lariat yet". The old rascal hung one on me.

Now the moral of his story as I could gather it is don't have an Elgin Watch, somebody will steal it. So my story is carry 'Bull' Durham, they may borrow it, but nobody will steal it.

Now after looking at this I don't know whether it is an ad for Elgin Watches, Chauncey Depew, The Follies or 'Bull' Durham.

Well, they are all good.

Will Rogers

P. S. I'm going to write some more pieces that will appear in this paper. Keep looking for them.

MORE OF EVERYTHING for a lot less money. That's the net of this 'Bull' Durham proposition. More flavor—more enjoyment—and a lot more money left in the bankroll at the end of a week's smoking.

RAYON NEW NAME FOR FIBER SILK

Rayon is the name recently adopteed by the trade for what has heretofore been termed artificial or fiber silk, states the division of clothing and textiles of the Bureau of Home Economics in reply to frequent inquiries as to whether rayon is a new textile fiber. Fiber silk was not only a misleading term but an incorrect one since this fiber is not an imitation of silk. In fact the only characteristic it has in common with silk is luster, and in this rayon excells. Rayon is manufactured from wood pulp and cotton linters by so treating them that they can be disolved and the resulting liquid formed into small filaments.

This division of what is frequently termed the "home-makers' bureau" of the United States Department of Agriculture is initiating research in textiles and clothing from the standpoint of the consumer An effort is being made to furnish information on the kind and quality of fiber used in various textiles and the method of handling before and after weaving. Where necessary, experimental studies will be carried on to aid the consumer, who is usually the woman in the household, in an intelligent selection of textiles.

Through such investigations as these, and also through studies of the household care and cleaning of clothing, short cuts in clothing construction, the use of patterns and principles of costume design, the division hopes to aid both those who make their own clothes and those who buy them ready-made.

CHUCRH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

We were pleased to see a number of visitors in our congregations Sunday morning and evening and assure them that we were glad to have them with us.

The S. S. contest closed with the young women's class winners. Now it is up to the losers to have their inning. We are unable to say at this time what they may plan as a reward but we are sure that the girls will fare well.

Now let the good work go on and let the splendid attendance continue No lull should ensue.

A glad welcome awaits you next Sunday at both services. Our theme in the morning will be: "To him that overcometh". In the evening we will study another of "Great Texts that made History."

The W. F. M. S. meets on Thursday afternoon at the Parish House with Mrs. Clarence Bachman as hostess

Few Autos Back in Payment of License

Treasurer Suurballe announces that at this time there are but seven and one-half percent of the autos of Hancock county in arrears and expects that percentage will be materially reduced before May 1st, which is publication time on delinquist. This is quite a remarkable showing and indicates that there is plenty of maney in the country—at least enough to pay license fee on several thousand automobiles and keep them in gasoline.—Garner Leader.

NORTH AVERY CLUB MEETS

The monthly meeting of "The North Avery Club" met at the E. J. Arnold home Friday evening. The entertainment consisted of many interesting numbers, a few of which we will mention.

A delicious lunch was served by the hostess assisted by her sisters, Mr. Koerner and Mr. Bredbenner. The sual number of guests were present and together with thec lub members a very pleasant time was had.

DR. FRASER CORONER OF HANCOCK COUNTY

On account of Dr. Fillmore of Corwith not qualifying for the office of coroner of Hancock county tfer his election to that position last fall, the office was vacant and it was up to the county board of supervisors to fill such vacancy. The matter was taken up at the board meeting last week, and Dr. J. E. Fraser of Garner was named. Dr. Snearly of Goodell, had been coroner for a couple of terms, but was not a candidate to suceed himself last fall.

Britt Mayor Hard on Law Breakers

Mayor Armstrong of Britt is fearless in fining those who insist on law breaking. He soaked B. A. Peterson $100, Warren Fox $30, Lewellyn and Ernie Hamlin $5. If some of the automobile booze runners who make frequent trips to Corwith and those who purchase the stuff were put on the carpet there would be something doing at Corwith also. —Corwith Hustler.

WIL PAY FIRE DEPARTMENT

Swea City has passed an ordinance under which the fire company of that town will be paid $1 each for each fire they attend. This in addition to their poll tax, which was all the payment they previously secured. The department is also to be motorized. The fire fighting apparatus is to be placed on a Studebaker truck. This is an improvement worth while. —Ringsted Dispatch.

Tightening Prohibition Law Enforcement

"Canned Heat is outlawed when it sold for redistillation for beverage purposes. An attempt to destroy or dump any liquid in the presence of a peace officer is made prima facie evidence that such liquid is intoxicating and intended for unlawful use. Manufacturers authorized to purchase alcohol for industrial use must report receipt of each shipment of their county auditor, giving the amount purchased and its intended use. The transportation of liquor by common carriers is forbidden, whether the transportation is for compensation or gratis.

THE BLUE CIRCLE

Renshaw walked slowly back to the house and, leaving his coat and hat in the hall closet, entered the study and shut and locked the door. He wanted to be alone and to think. He sat down in a chair before the fire, and mentally held Stanley's story up for inspection. He believed the old man had told him all he knew. He believed that what he had told him was true. He also knew, with absolute certainty, that the little episode of Madame Hvoeslef's memoirs, vital as it was to her and the Campbells, had nothing whatever to do with the phenomena he himself had observed at Tawno Ker—unless, indeed, the freakish exchange of the leather cases had some connection with them.

Madame Hvoeslef's memoirs did not account for prowling, climbing things, for blue circles, and for all the personal attention he himself had received in the still hours of the night. He was in no way connected with the memoirs. Neither did the fact that the household staff was on guard account for these things. But, by the way, if the servants were on guard, why the deuce hadn't they heard some of the sounds that had disturbed him? Possibly they had confined their pussy-footing to the other wing of the house, the one that held the memoirs and their owner. That would be natural enough. Also, there would be only one of them on the job each night. They would take turns, of course.

The contrast between the interesting but simple explanation Stanley had given him and the things he himself knew was nothing short of startling. Renshaw's mind clung to that; but he went to his desk, seated himself, and stretched a resolute hand toward the morning mail. To attend to that was his obvious duty now. His other duties were not obvious at all.

Officially, he was "in charge," whatever that meant. Personally, he was to "watch." The memory of the command, and the manner in which it was delivered, made him nod slowly to himself. Out of all the tangle around him, one fact at least loomed clear.

Campbell did know—perhaps had just learned—that something other than the foreign memoirs needed watching at Tawno Ker. Something had happened to Campbell last night, something that had opened his eyes, something that had then possibly caused his collapse. To find out the exact nature of that something was Renshaw's real job. It was a large order; but he would do his best.

The prospect greatly stimulated him. To write a dozen letters a day and hang disconsolately around the house the rest of the time would have depressed him very much. The alternative—to keep his eyes open, to watch, to get to the bottom of a business that first annoyed, then puzzled, and finally fascinated him—would be worth while. He ought to be able to make some progress tonight. He felt an inner certainty that at least he would be given the chance.

The longest, thickest envelope in the heap of mail was addressed to himself. He tore it open with a quickening of his heart-beats, and a number of inclosures fell out. He picked these up and examined them, at first almost feverishly, then carefully and with great deliberation. As he did so, it became clear that they were not only interesting but highly satisfactory. At last he laid the inclosures down, and leaned back in his chair for a moment of self-gratification.

Miss Campbell, if she had been present, would have been interested in the change of his expression. She had seen something like it once before—a sudden illumination of his features, like the flash of a light through darkness. But this change did not pass almost at once, as the other had done. It lingered a long time, while the new secretary, lips pursed in a contented whistle, opened and read the remaining mail.

Chapter X

The Closed Door.

At luncheon that day Renshaw regarded Madame Hvoeslef with the added interest due to his knowledge of her story. She had, of course, lost the gayety of the night before and wore the subdued air befitting a guest in a stricken household; but under it was an effort of mental ease and relief subtle but unmistakable. His appreciation of this increased as the meal went on and the four at the table exchanged comments on the reassuring news from the sick room.

Morris, giving this in person, and himself in an obvious state of physical and mental well-being as new as it was grateful, made his reports with unction.

"Mr. Campbell is doing splendidly," he volunteered over his grapefruit. "Better even than we dared to hope. He has a constitution that is amazing in a man of his age. Of course the life he has led is helping him a lot. A man ought to live a thousand years in an atmosphere like this." He glanced around the room, and, observing that for a moment the ubiquitous James was not present, was moved to a heart-felt encomium. "And that man Jenks is a wonder," he fervently went on. "I've never approved of much waiting on, myself. I thought we were all better off without it. Besides, I knew I wouldn't have it anyway in my bachelor establishment, so I might as well learn to wait on myself. But since I've been here Jenks has taught me what it is to a tired man to have all his personal wants anticipated from the moment he crosses the threshold. I'm going to spend the rest of my life looking for a man like Jenks," he solemnly ended—"that is, if I can ever earn enough to keep him after I find him."

Madame Hvoeslef caught the flying ball of tribute and neatly ping-ponged it toward Verity.

"All your servants are quite wonderful, my dear," she contributed. "I did not expect that, for I had heard the stories of America's servant problems. It is, I am sure, to you that we owe this perfection."

She turned to Morris. "Miss Campbell attends to all," she explained; "yet no one ever sees—how do you put it?—'the wheels go round'! Each morning she has everything arranged for the day before we lazy ones are out of our beds."

Renshaw glanced at Verity. This was news to him. Even after his talk with Jenks, he had assumed that Miss Campbell's part in the household routine was confined to making out the menus. He wished that she would look after the linen supply a little better. He liked a lot of towels, and since the day of his arrival his towels had not been replaced. Of course, he had been told that he could find fresh linen in that hall closet near his room; but at the recurrent moments when he missed it he usually was in an extreme state of undress and had soap in his eyes. It was not convenient, in these conditions, to plunge into the outer regions of the hall for fresh linen.

Verity was shaking her head.

"I don't do much," she corrected. "Jenks is really quite unusual, as Doctor Morris says. He thinks of everything. I often wonder how we got on before he came."

Morris returned to the topic that, next to his excellent luncheon, held his interest.

"Living in a bed of roses, I call it," he sententiously observed. "And it's what's going to save our patient. Absolute peace, rest, relaxation; no worry, no strain—not one man in a million can have all that. Your grandfather has it"—this last to Verity.

"And you're quite sure he will get well?" The girl's low voice was suddenly unsteady. Looking at her more closely, Renshaw saw that she was showing the effects of her night's vigil. Her clear pallor was intensified, and there were shadows under her eyes.

"I haven't a doubt of it." Morris spoke heartily, but with an utterance somewhat muffled by broiled sweetbreads. "In fact, I feel so comfortable about him that I'm going off for a few hours this afternoon. Mustn't neglect my other patients, you know. But, to be absolutely safe, I'll telephone several times, in case you want to reach me. It's largely a question of nursing now, and entire quiet. That's why we're keeping all you good people out of the sick room."

"You saw my aunt, Mrs. Pardee, this morning, didn't you, doctor?" Verity asked.

"Yes; I looked in on my way down to lunch. She's all right—only a slight cold. No temperature, no suggestion of influenza. I've told her to stay in bed today. Fortunately, she's not anxious about Mr. Campbell. She has accepted our prediction that he will soon be around again."

Through the mind of each of his three listeners flowed the same thought. Mrs. Pardee, the one member who had been utterly unconscious of the undercurrents at Tawno Ker, was also the one consistent pessimist in that menage. She had never had cause to worry, and she had never ceased to do so. Now that genuine reason for worry offered itself, she cast it off as unconsciously as a bird sheds a wing-feather.

After luncheon, Morris followed Renshaw into the study to smoke a companionable cigar. He had found an opportunity to carry out his resolution to sound Stanley about this odd young chap who looked like a pessimistic Greek athlete in modern clothes. The little he had learned had added to his interest. Apparently the secretary had passed through an experience that would have knocked out most men for all time. There seemed little left of its effects except the young man's detached air.

Morris had also been told something about Madame Hvoeslef, and had grasped the interesting fact that a minute representative of European royalty was in the main hall at the moment of Stanley's recital, earnestly engaged in kicking her nurse in the stomach as that stolid person bore her off for her morning nap. Morris had never before moved in such circles as these. He had a conviction that he never would again. His firm intention was to make the best of his opportunities—first by doing his utmost for his patient, for he was a conscientious man, and next by seeing as much of these interesting persons as his duties allowed.

Renshaw found himself unexpectedly liking the country doctor who was so simple, so direct, and so human, and whose enjoyment of the unusual creature comforts that surrounded him was as frank as a schoolboy's might have been. He was almost tempted to speak to Morris about the Thing and about the blue circle—almost, but not quite. He had not failed to take in the full significance of the physician's words during luncheon. Campbell needed, above everything else, perfect peace and quiet. To suggest that, after all, this admirably run establishment did not offer these things would seriously upset the physician's serene frame of mind—even if he accepted the statements at their face value, which probably he would not do.

The two men chatted of the patient and of the reports in the morning newspapers, and parted in fifteen minutes, Morris to make an afternoon round of his other patients, and Renshaw to mount to his room. He had some vague notion of asking Jenks to escort him through the house. He would most awfully like to know the entire plan. As he reached the upper hall, he met Verity at the head of the staircase. Her presence there surprised him. The inmates of the left wing generally used a side stairway that led to the rear of the main hall. Probably Miss Campbell had been on a housewifely tour of inspection. She was evidently about to descend; but she stopped now, facing him, as if she had something to say.

"We have been so confused since you came, Mr. Renshaw," she began, "that I haven't had a chance to ask you if you are comfortable in your room. I hope you are."

Standing on the step below her, he was on a line with her eyes. He had never before faced her so directly, or looked so steadily into those brown depths. The experience gave him an odd sensation—as if he were a diver going down, down in some clear, bottomless sea. Under the influence of this emotion, he self-consciously stammered his reply: "Why, yes, thanks; I'm all right."

She moved as if to pass him. He did not want her either to move or to pass. He wanted to keep her there. He had a conviction that now, for the first time, he was meeting and talking to the normal Verity Campbell. Last night she had been human enough, but panic-stricken. Today she was simple, natural, and, if not friendly, at least cordial. She looked at him as if she saw him. She definitely accepted him as a member of the household. Under the urge of his wish to prolong the gracious moment, he caught at the trailing end of his half-formed resolution.

"I was thinking of asking Jenks to show me over the house," he went on, almost diffidently. "Perhaps you will do it, if you have time."

She looked surprised, then seemed to understand.

"Of course I will, if you like," she told him. "But"—she hesitated—"there's no need of it, if you are thinking of Madame Hvoeslef's affairs. Now that all her papers are in a safe place—"

"Can we assume that her enemies know they are in a safe place? Aren't you taking it for granted that they know it because we know it? And if they don't yet know it, won't they still be prowling around?"

He was leaning his elbow on the upper rail of the staircase, speaking with a lightness that did not go with his words, and looking at her with the suggestion of a smile in his eyes. She appeared rather taken aback.

"Why, I suppose so," she slowly conceded. "All we had taken in was the relief of knowing that now they can prowl around, if they like, without doing any harm."

"Have they been prowling?"

His eyes, with their half-smile, were still on hers.

"Leoni thinks so—Madame Hvoeslef, I mean," she corrected herself. "She thinks she has seen figures lurking in the grounds. But I fancy she imagined them. She is very nervous and high-strung, and she has had some horrible experiences on the other side."

"You yourself have never seen or heard anything?"

She shook her head.

Earning Her Keep

A statistician claims to have discovered that a married woman, who does all the work of her own household, will, in the course of 30 years' married life, prepare nearly 200,000 meals. This is counting a meal as the amount of food required by one person.

During this time she will probably order for household consumption about 3,000 jars of jam, will boil 500,000 potatoes, and devote about 35,000 hours to sweeping, washing and scrubbing.

Valuing this work at the accepted prices now paid for "professional" aid, the housewife who does her own housework probably earns fully as much as her husband. But that is not to say that she gets it—oh, dear, no!—London Answers.

Cat's Self-Protection

Most of us would not be able to say why a cat always washes its jaws and paws immediately after a meal. It is because in the days when the cat was a wild animal and killed and ate its food raw, it would naturally finish a meal dripping with blood. If the cat had not bothered about this, the blood would have betrayed its hiding place to its enemies. Therefore it always washed itself carefully, and it has never lost the habit.

NOVEL CROWNS ADORN CLOCHES; UNUSUAL IN NOVELTY SWEATERS

IF IN doubt as to whether the cloche is still in fashion, take a stroll down Broadway or Main street and tabulate for one's self. However, there is a difference between the now and the then of every popular cloche. Analyzing the situation, the small cloche is keeping favor with the public by offering such a fascinating medley of novel crowns, one's interest is not allowed to lag.

For a long time fashion has thus been spending its ingenuity on crowns, brims being considered a negligible quantity, but lo! with the coming of spring brims have burst into sudden glory, that is as far as depth and size are concerned. The latest pokes are mostly brims, and they are getting ideas created by knitted outerwear stylists each season somewhat contradict the "nothing-new-under-the-sun" theory. Perhaps the artistically scarfed sweater in this picture is the "exception to the rule," for at a glance it proclaims the unusual. The thrill of newness which it affords is no doubt due to the unique placement of a fine white scarf or sash which is matched, as you will observe, to the cuffs and pocket flap. Not only in name, for this model is known throughout fashiondom as the "student prince" sweater, but in appearance this fetching knitted and sashed blouse is sure of appeal to women of artistic temperament. Indications are that before the season is far advanced the "student prince" more so as the season advances. In many instances of these new bonnet shapes, the brim is turned up at the back. Indeed, the turned-up back brim is a definite style tendency. Many of the large hats in the advance guard of summer millinery emphasize this feature. The idea is demonstrated in that charming poke bonnet shown last in the accompanying illustration. This model uses taffeta silk for its brim and fine silk haircloth for the gown. Note how the crown is fitted to the head.

Of the three modish cloches completing this group, it may be said that the crown in each instance shows great depth, this being a characteristic feature of the majority of little shapes. One traces the cloche trend in each brim, although presented in various moods of roll-off-face—for hat number two, slight droop for number one brim, with a restricted turban-bonnet effect defined in the tailored silk model.

Not only do brims roll high at the back in last-minute chapeaux, but the trimming itself rises in tall bows and erect effects directly over the coiffure. This is especially true of the larger-brimmed shapes which are "on the way" for summer conquests. Particularly are soft hair bodies folded up at the back, held into position by soft silken loops or under masses of stemmed roses.

The many "sometimes different" sweater will be a pronounced favorite.

There are innumerable other lovely and out-of-the-ordinary things among fashionable knitwear this season. For instance, there are new lacy one-piece frocks knitted of fine rayon which are adorable. They come in "delicious" colorings and their distinctive note is the long knitted sleeve.

The knitted scarf and shawls are marvels of beauty, being lavishly befringed and decidedly colorful. These partake of shawl-like square shapes. Of course, they are going to prove irresistible to the summer girl, for they are ideal over lightsome frocks.

Adding to the glory of things knitted are winsome hat, scarf and blouse sets, whose striking colors enliven the scene of picturesque fashion. Magenta with white bespeaks the last word in color combinations in these sets.

Here's Something Different.

Among sweater novelties a favorite is knitted of white mohair. The collar, cuffs and bindings are of gaily plaided flannel.

Knitted coats in fancy constructions are wonderfully popular, and becoming more so, as time progresses. These abound in novelty touches, such as all-over jacquard patternings, pipings of gold leather, while fancy knitted stitch contributes greatly to their interest. The chenille knitted coat is the latest. Last minute modes stress the knitted suspender skirt.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

HE IS RE-ELECTED OVER HIS PROTEST

E. P. Armstrong, national vice commander of the American Legion, is of the type of men which believes in getting things done. And he believes that the way to get things done is forsooth, to go and do them.

It is that driving power which has carried him from commander of his post to a re-election, to commander of his department, to a re-election over his protest, to a choice as national vice commander of the Legion. Those who have been closely associated with him in his home department of Connecticut, who have seen him work and observed the enthusiastic, compelling way in which he works, say that every Legionnaire in Connecticut loves him.

In four years of Legion work Armstrong has given largely of his time and energy and services to the cause of bettering the lot of men who returned from the war as physical wrecks. After he had been drafted as commander of Corporal post at Waterbury in 1922, he made the care of the disabled his first concern. Conditions were bad then and were complicated by serious unemployment. With others, Armstrong helped to find jobs for 1,000 jobless veterans. He found time in the midst of this activity to make his post the largest in the state.

Re-elected, Armstrong organized a Legion band. He started a post newspaper. He aided materially in securing a Legion home for service men at Waterbury, worth $100,000. Then he was elected department commander. He took a leave of absence from the Scovill Manufacturing company to devote himself exclusively to Legion work.

E. P. Armstrong.

Great strides in helping the disabled in Connecticut were made under his inspiration and guidance. He organized 14 new posts and brought his department from forty-fifth to second in percentage of membership gain over the preceding year. He made a speaking tour of the state on behalf of the Legion program, delivering from one to four speeches daily for forty-five days. Then after three nights of rest, he was off again, this time on a seventy-two-day schedule. He visited every post in his department and a number of cities where posts were being organized.

At the annual department convention last fall Armstrong was re-elected. He had made strenuous protest. But the delegates staged a demonstration for him in Wild West style and put him back in his job. At the national convention in St. Paul in 1924 he was chosen as one of the five national vice commanders. He resigned as department commander in order to devote himself to his work in the national field. And now he is busy again with his work for the disabled, devoting himself to the American Legion endowment fund for the disabled and the orphans of the war.

Subject Announced for National Essay Contest

The subject of the American Legion national essay contest for 1925 for American school children was announced recently by national headquarters of the Legion at Indianapolis. The subject is:

The contest is open to all boys and girls between the ages of twelve and eighteen, inclusive.

Prizes of $750, $500 and $250 for first, second and third places, respectively, have been offered. The cash prizes shall be used only for scholarships in recognized colleges to be chosen by the winners. Medals are also given to winners.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

Must Accept His Increase in Salary

Here is an up-to-date portrait of Henry St. George Tucker, Democrat, of Lexington, who represents the Tenth Virginia district in the national house. He declined to accept the $2,500 increase in salary which congress at the last session voted to give itself. Doubtless he felt a bit lonesome, for so far as known only seven other members of the house—and no senators—turned down the increase. And his refusal was all in vain, for Comptroller General McCarl ruled that the increase must be accepted.

The salary bill increased the salaries of members of congress from $7,700 to $10,000. The cabinet members were raised from $12,000 to $15,000; also the vice president and the speaker of the house. The bill was passed without a roll call in either chamber. The President hesitated a bit over signing it, but did sign—"with restrained enthusiasm." Of course many members voted against the bill and nearly all the representatives managed to get into the Congressional Record with an explanation of their vote. Johnson of Kentucky casually remarked that at the salary of $7,500 the only ones who could afford to go to congress were those who could draw upon their private resources and those who were incapable of earning anything at home.

Woodlock Given Recess Appointment

President Coolidge has given a recess appointment to Thomas F. Woodlock of New York to be a member of the interstate commerce commission, following refusal of the senate to confirm the nomination.

Woodlock will be obliged to serve without pay until December. At that time, if his appointment is approved by the senate, he may be granted back pay. If he is rejected again he will have no claim for remuneration.

Mr. Woodlock is a Democrat. The opposition to Mr. Woodlock, as publicly expressed by the Democrats, is due to the fact that they felt the South should be represented in the particular vacancy of the commission being filled. The President offered it to two men in the South who declined for private business reasons. Having tried the South and having also read the statute which does not specifically bind Mr. Coolidge to pick a man from the South, the President went ahead with the appointment of Mr. Woodlock.

There are other things besides southern representation involved in the controversy. Mr. Woodlock has been a financial writer in New York, and has spent a good deal of time in Wall Street. The Democrats think he will naturally reflect the views of the financial and railroad world rather than the shippers and farmers.

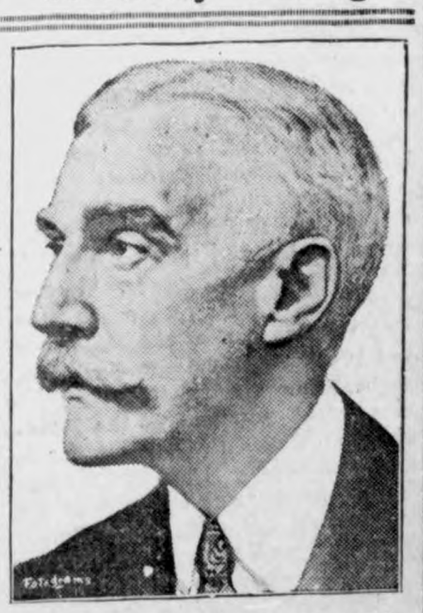
Leiter Grandchild Becomes Baroness

International marriages bring about odd things. Mary Irene, eldest daughter of the late Lord Curzon, and granddaughter of Levi Z. Leiter, Chicago merchant, inherits the baronies of Scarsdale and Ravendale and becomes a baroness through the death of her father. She is a daughter of Mary Leiter, whom Lord Curzon married in Washington in 1895 when he was parliamentary secretary to the British embassy. He later became viceroy of India and his wife the vicereine. She died in 1906. By the marriage settlement drawn in Chicago, Lord Curzon and his bride were provided with an income of $200,000 a year.

Once Lord Curzon and his wife's relatives had a dispute over $10,700. In June, 1923, his brother-in-law, Joseph Leiter, was made defendant in a suit seeking to remove him as one of the trustees of Levi Leiter's estate. The suit was started by Leiter's sister, Lady Marguerite, widow of the earl of Suffolk, but it later was settled. Joseph Leiter once failed to corner the wheat market in a crash involving millions, occasional echoes of which are still heard.

In the meantime Joseph Leiter and several employees are under indictment in Massachusetts under charges of Volstead act violations.

Secretary Mellon's Treasury Changes



Patriotism must be responsible for the filling of the post of secretary of the treasury by a man like Andrew W. Mellon (portrait herewith), who is one of the very rich men of the world and gets more criticism and abuse than salary. With the coming of Lincoln C. Andrews to succeed Assistant Secretary Eliot Wadsworth, a general realignment of duties is being made among the secretary's assistants.

Undersecretary Winston will become secretary of the World war foreign debt commission, and will have jurisdiction in handling all foreign debt matters, two functions carried on by Mr. Wadsworth. These will be in addition to the regular duties assigned to the undersecretary's office.

Assistant Secretary Dewey will supervise all railroad loan questions, heretofore under control of Mr. Wadsworth, in addition to his duties as assistant secretary in charge of fiscal affairs. Assistant Secretary Moss will be relieved of jurisdiction over the internal revenue bureau, which will be given to Mr. Andrews. Mr. Moss, however, will retain supervision over the bureau's prohibition unit, thus keeping enforcement efforts centered in one office, which will continue in charge of the division of customs and the coast guard, both of which are active in the prohibition program.

Mr. Andrews, in addition to the internal revenue bureau, which usually is regarded as a one-man job, probably will be given charge of the supervising architect's office also, together with continued control over the public health service.

MANY HOUSEKEEPERS TOO ILL TO WORK

MRS. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG
651 37TH STREET, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I was in a badly run-down condition and I would get weak spells and terrible headaches. I felt so badly last year that I could not do any housecleaning. The minute I would lift or stoop it seemed as if I was going to fall to pieces. I told a neighbor how I felt and she said that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was surely the right thing for me. I took four bottles then and in the fall of the year I took three. I had been treated by a doctor, but he gave me an iron tonic and that did not help me. It seemed that the tonic did not have in it what the Vegetable Compound did. That gave me the strength and ambition I needed and I have gained in weight. This year before I started to clean house I got four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and am taking it right along. I tell all my friends about it and how much good it does me. They can notice it because I have gained in weight. I weigh 118 now and do all my work myself again."—Mrs. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG, 651 37th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was so sick that I thought I would try it. My husband knew it was good as he knew a woman it had helped. It took all my pains away and I don't have any backache now. I do my own housework, take care of a few chickens and my garden, and have a little girl three years old to look out for. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and I will answer all the questions I can, if any one writes to me."—Mrs. ADA EARL, Box 28, Horace, Nebraska.

Old Books Best Sellers

HOW BUSY IS HONEYBEE? INVESTIGATORS FIND ANSWER

To determine "just how busy the honeybee might be," and when and why, was the object of an investigation recently made by scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture. The scientists wanted to know how many bees worked out from the hive, how long the trip was what time of day and what time of the season the flights were made,, and how much of a load each bee returned to the hive. These facts are to a large degree a reflections of the nectar conditions of the field, and the scientists believed that if a means of counting the bees as they passed from the hive could be devised it would open upa new field of agricultural research.

After many trials of various kinds of devices, a "gate' 'was evolved thro which but one bee could pass at a time. In passing in or out of the gate, of which there were a large number to each hive, the weight of the bee caused an electrical contact to be made which operated a recording mechanism.

By knowing the amount of nectar gathered on any one day and the total number of bees which return, the minimum weight of the average load carried by each bee can be estimated The highest minimum weight carried can be estimated. The highest minimum average load obtained during the study was on May 22, when 44,597 bees averaged 25.3 milligrams each. The data made possible the conclusion of the amount of nectar available to the bees is indicated by the average load carried by the bees.

In the course of the study it was ascertained that of the 2,434,666 bees which left the hive 3.16 per cent did not return. This would mean that on the average a bee makes about 31.65 trips before over takes it. A bee may make a trip lasting anywhere from 8 minutes to one hour and 54 minutes, depending on the honey flow. The figures seem to show however, that even in a heavy honey flow the bees spend more time in the hive than they do on the trip itself.

Having devised a fairly accurate method of keeping count of the working bees, the department expects to discover, among other facts just what effect the time of spraying near by orchards with certain poisonous insecticides may have on the mortality of the apiary. It is believed that bees respond to certain sounds, odors and other stimuli and that data gathered from counting the activities of the bees will throw light on these beliefs also.

From conclusions which the figures would seem to indicate, the fame of the "busy bee" must rest upon her appearance of business only and not upon the size of the pile of honey she leaves for her heirs. For if we multiply the weight of the average load carried by a bee by the number of trips she makes in her lifetime, it will be seen that individually she is of small importance. Her lifetime accumulation of nectar amounts to but 800 milligrams, or eight tenths of a gram. At this rate of production if would require the work of 567 bees for a lifetime to produce a pound of nectar.

BIGHORN MOUNTAIN SHEEP MAY AGAIN FREQUENT THE WEST

"Can you tell me where I can secure two buck mountain sheep and three ewes for extensive ranges in this state which were once occupied by large numbers of bighorn?" Such inquiries are quite commonly addressed to the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agricuuture. The only answer that can be given, says Dr. E. W. Nelson, chief of the bureau, is that there is no place in the United States at present where mountain sheep can be secured either for exhibition or for breeding purposes. Several shipments of bighorn have come into the United States recently as a result of the courtesy of the Canadian Government. These animals—eight ewes and four bucks were captured in one of the Canadian parks and turned loose in 1922 on the Montana National Bison Range. On this 18,000 acre game refuge in the north western part of the State they have bred twice, and the flock now numbers 28.

As far as now known, the breeding of mountain sheep is similar to that of domestic sheep, with which 75 and 80 percent lamb crops are not unusual. The Biological Survey therefore, confidently looks forward to the time when the mountain sheep on the Montana Bison Range will number 500—say 450 ewes and 50 bucks. With such a flock, allowing a wide margin for losses, there should be 350 or more available each year for shipment from the range to stock suitable areas throughout the country.

One shipment of mountain sheep recently received in this country from the Canadian Government was placed on the Custer State Park and Game Refuge in the Black Hills of South Dakota. The six ewes each game birth to a lamb the year they were received. One animal injured in shipment, died during the summer, but at last reports the others were doing remarkably well.

There is an enormous acreage of good mountain sheep country in the Western United States, and there is no finer big game animal for such areas than the bighorn.

HOUSEHOLD CONVENIENCES

An electric iron is a great time-saver when put to work in the sewing room. It eliminates the tedious chore of basting a number of things. For turning up hems, and bottoms of sleeves, making pipings and similar work, merely turn down the goods with your fingers and then press them with the iron. No basting is necessary. Small parts of patterns can be pressed over the goods. They will adhere just enough so that na pinning is necessary.

TO CLEAN YOUR PERCOLATOR

An easy way to clean the tube of your electric percolator and to remove any brown deposit from the inside is to place four heaping tablespoonsful of salt in the coffee compartment. Fill the percolator with the same amount of water usually used for cofee and allow to percolate for a similar length of time. By the time this is done, any grains of coffee lodged in crevices will have fallen on thes urface of the utensil will be gone.

BAIT CONTROLS GROUND PEST

Calcium Cyanide or Strychnine Will Finish Ground Squirrels

Striped and grey ground squirrels greatly reduce corn stands in many Iowa counties each year by digging up the seed both before and after it starts to grow. Often they dig up plants two or more inches in height in order to get the seed kernels. These pests may be controlledsuccessfully by the use of calcium cyanide or by poison bait.

Calcium cyanide, in the form of flakes, granules or dust. is perhaps most effective. Locate the burrows by mean of a long handled spoon and place about a tablespoonful of the flakes or granules as far down in the burrow as possible. Then close the burrow with soil or grass If dust is used, blow it into the burdow with a dusting machine and then close the opening.

A good poison bait which may be placed in the burrow openings can be made as follows: Dissolve one tablespoonful of laundry starch in a half cup of cold water and stir in one half pint of boiling water to make a thin, clear mucilage. Mix one ounce of powdered strychnine with a similar amount of powdered bicarbonate of soda and stir the mix ture into hot starch solution to make a smooth paste. Stir in also onefourth pint of heavy corn syrup, one tablespoonful of glycerin and one scant teaspoonful of saccharine. Apply to 20 quarts of clean oats, and mix thoroly to coat the kernels evenly.

DAIRY OUTLOOK IS BRIGHTER

Shifters Are Going out of Dairy Business, Says Mortenson

Figures on the surplus holding of butter and cheese in the United States make the outlook brighter for the dairyman, according to M. Mortensen, chief in dairy, Iowa State College.

Creamery butter holdings on April 1 were 10,900,000 pounds as compared to average holdings on April 1 for the last five years of 9,813,000 pounds, which indicates that the situation is coming back to normal. Surplus holdings in butter were 2,879,000 pounds on March 1 of this year. During one month, surplus butter was reduced by nearly 18,000,000 pounds.

American cheese holdings on April 1 of this year were 27,743,000 lbs. as compared to holdings of 28,-294,000 pounds for April 1924.

Increasing demand and the fact that many of the 'shifters" are going out of the milking business are speed up the return of dairying to normalcy.

TWO MAD DOGS KILLED WEST OF KANAWHA

A strange dog was seen loitering along the Valley road about two weeks ago and later went to a farm near Corwith, where his savage actions compelled the farmer to shoot him. It proved to be a mad dog. After this incident a dog owned by one of our farmers acted queer with a drooping tail and head, and when he was seen trying to bite a wagon wheel his owner had him shot. IT COULDN'T BE DONE

Somebody said that it couln't be done,
But he with a chuckle, replied
That "Maybe it couldn't," bue he'd be one,
He wouldn't say so till he'd tried,
So he buckled right in, with the trace of a grin,
And if he worried, he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done, and he did it.

Somebody scoffed: "Oh you'll never do that,
At least no one ever has done it."
But he took off his coat and he took off his hat
And the first thing we knew he'd begun it.
Without a daubt or quiddit:
With the lift of his chin, and a bit of a grin,
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done and he did it

There are thousands to tell you it cannot de done;
There are thousands to prophesy failure;
There are thousands to point out to you, one by one,
The dangers that wait to assail you.
But just buckle in, and with a bit of a grin,
Then take off your coat and go at it:
Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing
That "cannot be done"—and you' ll do it.

RHUBARB HAS VARIETY OF USES

Works Well in Combination With Several other Fruits

While there is always plenty of rhubarb in the garden housewives often know of only a few ways in which it can be served. In reality, saks Miss Alma Riemenscneider of the home economics division, Iowa State college, there are many ways to serve it. Conserves may be made of combinations of rhubarb with apricots, pineapples, strawberries or prunes and nuts or raisins may be added if desired. Rhubarb may also be used the ame a any other bruit so used in sherbets and ices.

To make rhubarb conserve: 2 quarts rhubarb cubes; three-fourths pound of raisins one fourth pound of almonds, 2 oranges (use the pulp) and sugar; combine rhubarb and arange pulp and raisins; add two-thirds measure of sugar; cook 45 minutes; add shredded almonds and cook to jelly test.

To make rhubarb-apricot conserve 1 pound dried apricots, 1 pound rhubarb and sugar; cook apricots; conbine with rhubarb and cook until soft; two thirds measure of sugar and cook to jelly test; lemon may be added to improve flavor; shredded almonds may be added about 15 minutes before the jelly test is reached.

To make rhubarb sherbet: 2 lbs. rhubarb, 1½ cups sugar 2 cups water, piece of one lemon and one teaspoon of gelatin; cut rhubarb into cubes add water; cook until soft; add sugar; soften gelatin in cold water and add to rhubarb when cool add the piece of lemon and freeze; one fourth cup of chopped crystalized ginger may be added.

BOOSTERS TO BE HERE

A special train with speakers, a band and a large number of community boosters from Mason City will arrive in Klemme on May 6 at 3:15 p. m. and will leave at 3:40. The trip is being taken by Mason City jobbers and manufacturers in an effort to get better acquainted with the people of northern Iowa.

The special train will leave Mason City on the morning of May 5 and return on the evening of May 6. Short stops are to be made at each town, beginning at Iowa Falls. There will be band music and a short talk Souvenirs will be distributed.

WRITTEN FOR THE BOOSTERS

The Booster Clubs of Southern California have asked their friends to write letters 'back east telling the truth about that part of the country.

One woman writes as follows:

"Oh come to the land of the western sun, where every business is overdone, where the stores charge freight on the goods made here, ask them the reason and they think you queer. They serve you climate with all your meals, it's so blame hot you back just peels. The 'Ananias Club' includes the state from San Diego to the Golden Gate. The movie stars marry twice a year, would marry more if the way were clear. The grapefruit here is some thing fine, cross between lemon and pumpkin rind. Where cows eat barley instead of hay and the cream gets lost in the milky way. They sell you lots that are made by hand and make you believe it's really land. The view of the ocean is very nice—that is included in the price. They weigh the sack and then the fruit, then weigh them again with their fingers to boot. They claim it is wet if a rains once a year you get so dry you can't shed a tear. The chickens have mites, the dog has fleas the desert wind blows and the oranges freeze. We shovel sand, you shovel snow, just about a standoff, far as I know. So tune up your flivver and start for the west, where jobs are scarce and pay is less. Bring all your cash and plenty of clothes, when you get more the Lord only knows. I am telling this story which Iknow to be true, as seen by me thru eyes of blue. If the Booster Club ever gets this back, they will change my eyes from blue to black. They asked me to write the truth to a friend. Now I have done so and this is the end."

After June 1, the penalty will be added to delinquent licenses. After May 31 according to the Iowa code the county auditor is required to list with the treasurer the name of the owner of each unlicensed dog and the amount of delinquent dog tax to the regular tax.

Dogs kept in kennels and not allowed to run at large are taxed as personal property. The Iowa code states that "it shall be lawful for any person, and the duty of all peace officers within their respective jurisdictions, to kill any dog for which a license is required, when such dog is not wearing a collar with license tag attached."

The code also states "it shall be lawful for any person to kill a dog, licensed and wearing a collar with license tag attached, when such dog is caught in the act of worrying, chasing, maiming, or killing any domestic animal or fowl, or when such dog is attacking or attempting to bite a person."

GRUESOME DISCOVERY IN HOLLOW TRE

A farmer traveling through the woods skirting the Missouri river at Hamburg, Fremont county, looking for his cattle that had strayed away climbed to the top of a broken tree trunk about ten feet high that he might obtain a better view. This remnant of a massive tree was hollow and to his horror and surprise discovered a human skeleton at the bottom. After summoning assistance, he was lowered to the bottom and found the bones had evidently lain in this sepulchre for many years, as a small amount of money dated in the 50's and an old flintlock musket were found. There were no marks of identification, nor anything from which a clue to the man's identity might be made, only a few buttons and his musket, the stock of which was but slightly decayed.

STATE HAS HUGE LUMBER BILL

2,500,000 Acres in Iowa Are Best Suited To Producing Timber

The people of Iowa have a genuine interest in American Forest week, proclaimed by President Coolidge for observance April 27 to May 3, as an opportunity for bringing before the American people the facts concerning wastage manufacturing operations and failure to keep America's forest land at work growing tree crops.

Iowa has an annual wood bill of around $42,000,000 according to the forestry men at Iowa State College. Itemized of this bill are $1,-500,000 cords of wood, 2,000 board feet of lumber per farm, and 262,-000,000 board feet of lumber for her wood using industries. And coupled with this enormous lumber bill is the fact that Iowa has 2,-500,000 acres of land best suited to the production of timber crops.

How many Iowa farmers know to a dollar what an acre of woodland has yielded them? Iowa landowners have no right to say that a patch of woodland is waste ground or a nuisance, say the forestry men, until they have given the patch the same kind of farming and kept the same kinds of records as they have for other acreage.

The value of the wild life alone is no inconsiderable item. A report from one of Iowa's lake areas showed that one year 9,000 skins were produced from 1,100 acres of non-agricultural land a return per acre of over $8 annually, without any labor for preparing the crop. The value of the skins and the fish the total return per acre would amount to $15 annually.

THE FISHING SEASON

Several new fish and game laws are in effect this year in Iowa. It has been generally thought a hunting and fishing license is needed in all cases in Iowa. The Fort Dodge Messenger states, apparently with authority that, "Hunting licnses are not needed to fish in the streams of Iowa, despite the fact that many believe this to be true. Licenses are needed only when a person fishes in a lake that has been stocked by the state fish and game department Then the regulation fish and hunting license must be procured at a cost of a dollar. Last year's hunting licenses are good until July 1."

In the northern zone of Iowa the law provides that the season opens for salmon and trout on April 14. If any one knows where these fish may be found they are priveledged to fish now. Pike, crappies, pickeral, catfish, and perch come in for their share of grief on May 15, while the black bass season does not open until June 15.

The provision regarding the black bass season is one that anglers should be careful of this year. In past years the black bass season opened at the same time for other game fih. In order to protect the diminishing quantity of bass, the season's opening date was pushed back a whole month. Game wardens throughout the state have been cautioned to watch for any violations of this black bass provision.

The new game law says that only twenty-five fish may be taken in one day. Of this number not more than ten may be pike or bass.

BIBLE READING GROWS

By law, the Bible is read daily in the public schools of Massachuetts, New Jersey, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia. Except Massachuettts, these states have passed such mandatory laws in the last ten years. In addition to the above states, the Bible is used every morning in all the schools of New York City, Washington, D. C.(and Indianapolis, Ind. The Bible is on the other hand definitely excluded from the schools of twelves states and permitted in twenty nine others.

"Leoni made us all feel creepy for a few weeks," she admitted. "I know she was on grandfather's nerves. She almost got on mine. It's a wonder she did not make us imagine all sorts of things. As it was, we had a servant on guard every night, you know."

"Inside the house?"

"Yes. And outside, too."

"And they never heard or saw anything?"

"Hart said he saw a man stealing along our driveway late one night, but he ran as soon as he knew he was discovered, and Hart could not catch him. Jenks saw two others—several times."

"And that's all they reported?"

"Absolutely all." Verity started to descend the staircase. Then, recalling his request, she stopped. "But if you still care to go over the house," she added, "I shall be glad to take you."

"You're sure you have time?"

"Quite. Where shall we begin?"

"Just where we are. I know my own room, so we needn't bother about that. And I've seen Mr. Campbell's suite and the room Doctor Morris has. Also, I know where yours is. What other rooms are on this floor?"

She told him as they walked down the corridor toward the left wing. There was an upper library and reading room, which no one used. She threw open the door and showed it to him. There were also two empty rooms and a bath running along the front of the house. There was Mrs. Pardee's bedroom and bath, and a rather elaborate guest suite occupied by Madame Hvoeslef—of which one big room was assigned to Wanda and her nurse. Verity opened the doors of some of these, and pointed out the locations of all. Renshaw soon had a mental map of the second floor.

"Are there any long windows and balconies anywhere?" he wanted to know.

Again she shook her head.

The third floor, to which they presently ascended, held a well equipped billiard room, which, according to Verity, no one ever entered, a gymnasium over Renshaw's room, which no one ever used, and several empty bedrooms and bathrooms. It also held, in the rear, the servants' quarters. Like everything else in the house, these were well lighted and modern as to their fittings. They included a large sitting room with comfortable chairs, reading lamps, and tables, an open fire, and a supply of books, newspapers, and magazines.

"One understands why your staff is so well satisfied," he remarked as he glanced in.

"They don't seem so well satisfied lately." Verity's smooth brow puckered. "Even Jenks has changed a little, and James seemed almost sullen yesterday. I do hope we aren't going to have trouble with them, now of all times."

Verity Nodded Toward Half a Dozen Foreign-Built "Boxes" That Occupied a Conspicuous Place in the Foreground.

"Possibly it's the night watching they object to."

"I suppose so. And yet, on the other hand, Leoni gives them the most amazing fees. We have begged her not to, for of course she can't afford it; but she is used to doing everything on a superb scale and she is not able to change her ideas. Any servants, anywhere, would be glad to do what she asks for what she gives them. And after this, of course, they won't have to watch."

"Possibly that's what's the matter with them. Perhaps they see their fat fees departing."

"Possibly. But I don't think so. They know her well enough by this time to realize that she will keep on subsidizing them, on one excuse or another. It's the way Leoni is made. She is the most generous woman in the world. Yet hereafter she and Wanda and Irma may have to live on a petty three thousand a year—"

She added the last words as if she were thinking aloud. "You know about her?" she asked suddenly.

"Doctor Stanley told me a good deal."

"Then you know who she really is? And Wanda?"

"No; he did not tell me that. There's no reason why I should know."

"I have asked her to leave Wanda here with me, to be educated in America. I know she is trying to whip herself up to the point of doing it, but it will be very hard for her. Wanda is all she has left, you know."

He nodded.

"Yes, I understood that. But I hope you will keep the child," he added, more warmly than he had ever spoken to her. It would be vastly comforting to think of his little friend as safe in this girl's care.

They ascended to the fourth floor and dispassionately surveyed an enormous attic, given up to the largest collection of trunks Renshaw had ever seen outside of a railroad station. Verity nodded toward half a dozen huge foreign-built "boxes" that occupied a conspicuous place in the foreground.

"Those are Leoni's," she said. "They hold everything she has, poor darling, aside from the precious memoirs."

As they returned to the second floor, she described to him the plan of the first, with which, however, he was fairly familiar. Back of the living room, dining room, and two studies were a huge kitchen, a butler's pantry, and twin storerooms which Mrs. Pardee had so ardently desired to fill with sugar.

"Would you like to go down and go through them?" Verity rather listlessly suggested.

Renshaw looked at her with sudden compunction.

"No," he said. "You're tired. I should have remembered that, and not dragged you all over the house."

"Oh, I'm not tired." In a gallant effort to prove that she was not tired, she gave him her first really spontaneous smile.

"And your room is all right? You have no complaint to make?" she added jestingly.

"Not a complaint—except that I like a few dozen towels a day, and they are forgotten."

Verity looked surprised.

"Forgotten!" she echoed. "Are you serious? Why, that doesn't sound like Annie! She literally festoons my bathroom with towels." Her eyes fell on the closet door. "But if she does forget," she ended, "there are always heaps in this closet. At least, she's supposed to keep them here—"

She opened the door and entered the closet as she spoke. Renshaw paused on its threshold for a moment, and then casually followed her. This was the third time he had been warmly commended to that particular closet. He might as well see what was in it.

What he saw was that it was a windowless closet the size and shape of his long and narrow bathroom, but lined with shelves filled with linen. There was a really fine supply of linen on exhibition, such a display as any housewife might be proud of. Verity, contemplating it with her back to him, tossed him a complacent sentence:

"If you want dozens of towels, here they are. Any time you find your supply short—" She broke off with a gasp. "Why did you do that?"

"I didn't!"

His voice came to her out of the sudden blackness that encompassed them. "The door slammed shut after me just this instant. And, by Jove—" He had turned and was twisting the doorknob, at first easily, then fiercely. Now he leaned against the heavy oak, exerting all his strength to push it outward. It did not yield.

"What's wroing with it?"

The girl's words were breathless. He had had time to think.

"Why, nothing at all," he said in matter-of-fact tones. "The door slammed with such force that it stuck fast. I'll have it open in a moment!"

"Oh!"

He heard her exhale her caught breath on the word. She was reassured, but only momentarily. He himself was not reassured at all. In his hand the doorknob was turning round and round without resistance. It did not catch and retract the lock. Yet the knob had opened the door. Of course, it was possible that the inner knob had got out of order, and that no one had discovered it. About the only way one was likely to discover it was by vainly trying to open the closed door from the inside. All that might happen. All that was easily understood.

But—why had the door closed? It had been half way open, at right angles with the threshold, and his hand had not touched it. There was no draft in the hall to swing it to. Moreover, only on the wings of an incipient cyclone could a draft be borne to close a door with the violent slam that had accompanied the closing upon them of this door. The motive power of the slam was a strong human push. He was convinced of that. Yet who could have administered the push? No one had been in the hall—no one, that is, that he had seen. When he entered the closet and for that moment stood on its threshold, the open door itself had cut off from his vision anyone or anything that might suddenly have come along the hall.

As he thought, he worked over the knob, twisting it this way and that way, trying various combinations, pushing against the door quietly but with all his strength, hoping against hope that the mechanism would catch and turn. Unless it did catch and turn, they were prisoners. All the time he realized that it would not catch and turn. And he had nothing in his pockets to work with, not even a small penknife.

He redoubled his efforts. The knob whirled smoothly round and round. Perspiration broke out upon his brow. This was a devilish situation for the girl to be in! The closet was as black as an underground dungeon, and so small that, though she had stepped away from him to give him room to work, he could hear her quick breathing and the soft rustle of her garments as she moved.

If You Want a Dozen Towels Here They Are.

That wing was the loneliest spot in the house. Even if they made the biggest kind of racket, it might be long before anyone heard them. Probably no one would miss them or begin to look for them till tea time—possibly not till dinner time. It was now three o'clock, at the most. That meant a wait of hours. And in the interval he would have to tell the girl the truth. He would have to tell her the truth at once. She was plucky. She was trying to keep steady. But he realized that she was fighting an incipient panic.

Yes, "devilish" was the right word for the situation. It was so absolutely the right word, and it fitted so perfectly into the pattern of certain other episodes at Tawno Ker, that a cold conviction settled over him. Of course, the little accident was not an accident at all, though it could so easily be made to seem one. The shutting of that door had been a malicious action— as deliberately malicious as the actions that had so disturbed his nights.

From this conclusion to the next was a short step, and he took it as he patiently experimented with the useless knob. It was unquestionably another malicious outbreak from that same malicious source.

Verity's voice came to him out of the blackness:

"Can't—you—open—it?"

"Not yet."

He spoke with robust cheerfulness, and even in her growing panic the girl took in the complete change in the quality of his voice. Renshaw's voice had been one of the things to which she objected in him. It was in itself an agreeable, even a musical barytone; but it spoke with an odd flatness, as if its possessor were out of key with the harmonies of life. Now it vibrated with a vital quality she had never heard in it before. She appreciated the change, but it did not deceive her. She knew he had put on the tone for her, as he might have put on a reassuring tone in speaking to Wanda if he had found the child lost and frightened.

"What is wrong? Is it really only stuck or—is it locked?"

She spoke quite naturally. Insensibly, she had been calmed and encouraged by his matter-of-factness.

"The knob turns without retracting the bolt." He explained the matter in detail, glad to divert her mind by conversation while he worked.

Helium and Hydrogen

The bureau of standards says helium will lift 0.066 pounds per cubic foot under ordinary conditions. Hydrogen will lift 0.071 pounds per cubic foot. If air and gas are at the same pressure, reduction of pressure causes a proportional reduction of lift. Increase of pressure on the gas decreases the lift.

Community Building

Finer School Buildings Is Universal Demand

The little old red schoolhouse is dropping off into obscurity. Like the hickory stick of the Three R's days, it is becoming but a ghost of the dim past.

"Modern progress," says the Indiana Limestone Quarrymen's association, "is sweeping before it the flimsy shells that once housed armies of tiny Americans. These claptrap structures, cold, unsanitary and at best poor fire risks, are rapidly being replaced by sturdy modern buildings.

"A survey just completed shows that during the year 1924 more than $225,000,000 was expended in replacing antiquated school buildings.

"Plans have been adopted and contracts already awarded indicate that the present year will show a still greater volume of school building construction. Beauty in architecture is being combined with utilization.

"Community interest and civic pride are in a measure responsible for the stride toward better school buildings. More and more schools are becoming community centers as well as temples of wisdom. Space for assemblies and recreation purposes are now almost a first consideration.

"Waste of space was a characteristic of many old school buildings. By judicious architecture, it has been estimated, $50,000,000 could be saved, the chief economies being in the reduction of waste space on stairs and corridors and the increase in usable area.

"The future will see finer school buildings with better facilities and at a lower cost to the taxpayer."

Old Schoolhouse Now a Community Center

One little red schoolhouse in Vermont has been transformed into a lively center of community co-operation, according to the statement of the superintendent of schools in Poultney, made to the Interior department, bureau of education. This schoolhouse was lacking in attractiveness and in the conveniences and equipment needed by a modern rural school until 1922, when a parent-teacher association was organized. Things began to happen as soon as the men and women of the community became interested in the school. Money was raised for necessary equipment. Fourteen men with four teams in the school district had a "bee" one Saturday afternoon which resulted in regrading the school grounds. The people opened their homes and raised money in various ways for further improvements. The teacher co-operated with the women in their efforts to raise money.

The school is now rated a "standard school," but the Red Schoolhouse Parent-Teacher association will continue to work until a "superior" name plate has been placed on the building.

"Go-Getter" Wins

There is but one sure way to get what one wants, and that is to go after it and to go with such determination that obstacles to attainment will be removed. This is as true of towns and communities as of men. If a town wishes another industry it will get it much more quickly by going after it with some definite and attractive offer than by waiting for the industry to come seeking location. If a town needs a new hotel, as Albertville did, the quickest way to get one is to do as Albertville did. It is the "go-getter" that gets results and the town that needs a hotel, an industry, a bank or a larger population must be a "go-getter" if it hopes to secure the thing desired. Albertville has pointed the way to many small Alabama cities. —Anniston (Ala.) Star.

Our Little Town

There are fancier towns than our little burg.
There are towns that are bigger than this,
But folks that live here in our little town
Don't know of the pleasures they miss.
And so we're contented to live on right here,
Nor worry o'er things of the West,
Or the East or the North or the South, whatsoe'er,
For we know our own town is the best.

—Kansas City Star.

Caring for Ant Eggs Is New Occupation

Attention has lately been called to two unsuspected, if not brand new trades—that of the professional dinner getter-up, who arranges testimonial banquets at so much a plate, and that of the self-avowed principal of a boy lot-fixing school, with 30 pupils, in an office building. Even less known is the occupation of caring for ant eggs, the New York Times says.

It would take a great many ants to keep one man busy all the time, yet by and large, enough work is given to this task in New York to represent a considerable total of labor hours in a year. The ant egg needs to be coddled, though not in the culinary sense. It has a reputation for temperament deserved or not. It comes by the million in paper packages. Japanese and Chinese stores carry this commodity.

"It is very good," says the Japanese, "for soft-bill birds." But who has any soft-bill birds in New York? The Japanese shrugs and bobs. "It is very good also," he says, "for goldfish. But not too much."

Crisis for Men

A traveling salesman standing in the lobby of a downtown hotel was discussing men's clothes. "The trouble with suits," he declared, "is that when you buy one made from a material that will wear a long time you have a suit that is not very attractive. On the other hand, the suit that looks well to you and makes a good impression on others is of the sort of material that not only loses its shape quickly but wears out quickly. I hope some manufacturer some day looms a cloth that will have the toughness of the wire mingled with the beauty of the silver. Then the situation will be prepared."—Detroit News.

You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it. A prominent druggist says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, as many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and inclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

Many famous French actors and singers have sprung from working families. Antoine, famous actor and manager, started life as a clerk for an electric light company, while the comedian Chevalier had a fruit stand near the Comedie Francaise. FASCINATING TUB FABRICS; MODISH TAILORED TOPCOATS

GAY deceivers indeed are the new tub-fabrics. One has to be let into the secret that wash materials "as is" this season are really and truly so. They do not betray the fact as far as appearance goes. Indeed, they possess all the elegance and fascination of higher priced genuine silks and woolens, and it takes an expert to classify them.

The ambitious home dressmaker who feels the annual spring urge to roam through aisles of wash-goods splendor, has many happy surprises in store. Where once the simple gingham and percale held sway, are bolts of ravishing materials, chief among which are wash silks which are not silk at all, but wonderfully mercerized cotton, likewise plaided and striped cotton and silk-mixed cheviots which look like they cost dollars per yard instead of cents. These silks-to-all-appearance are wrought in all-over figured patterns as charming and intriguing in design as the most exclusive foulard or gay print. Awning and candy stripes are particularly stressed.

Surely it is a gala year for the seamstress who would "try her luck" in making at least her informal dresses herself. Not only are the materials inspirational, but Madame Mode holds forth the extra inducement of recommending plenteous hand embroidery, by way of embellishment.

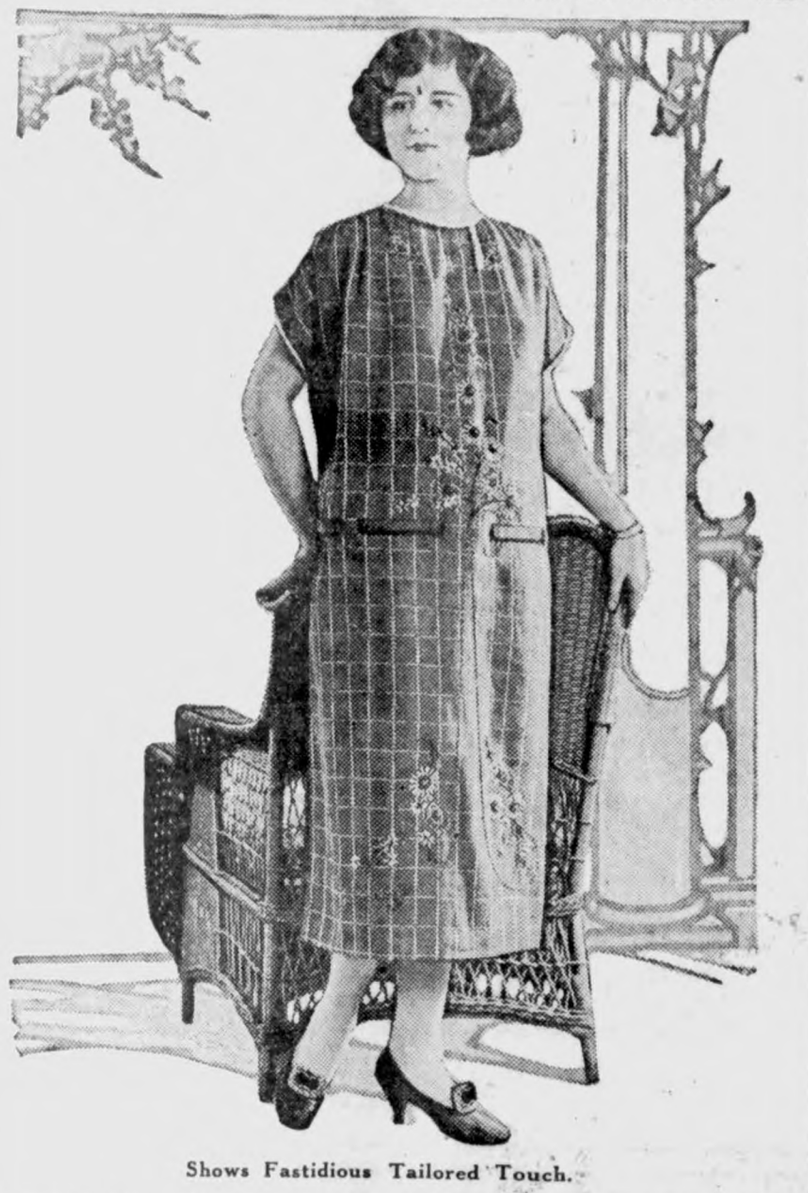
One would make no mistake in copying the charming frock as it appears in this picture. A few yards of wash cheviot, in such obtainable combinations as royal blue plaided with yellow ochre and rose, or henna with beige will serve admirably as a medium for deft fingers to fashion along lines suggested by this model. As to embroidery, it expresses itself, this season, in realistic bouquets, strewn in artistic manner, as defined in the picture.

The "shoulder bouquet" idea finds naive interpretation on many a frock this season, through means of hand stitching. For instance, a rose-hued linen, made in one-piece fashion has a bouquet of daisies and violets embroidered on the left shoulder, positioned similar to the bouquet of artificial flowers.

The ideal of what a smart spring wrap should be, is realized in the season's collection of handsomely, yet practically, styled topcoats. Fashionists are making it a point to introduce unique and fastidious tailoring touches which lend infinite charm without detracting from genuine service and usefulness.

The mode offers supreme contrast in these tailored coat silhouettes without suggesting the eccentric. The smartly costumed woman has her choice of the straightline coat, the flared coat or the mannish double-breasted coat.

An interesting version of the straightline contour is presented in this picture. A novel feature introduced in the newer models is elaboration of cut concentrated at the back of the coat. It is the treatment of a back-panel which gives chic to the model illustrated. That the slim silhouette is in no way detracted from through this novelty panel testifies to the consummate art of the designer.



Shows Fastidious Tailored Touch.

Charming Frock Easy to Copy.

Other high lights in this garment are the curious slashed or tabbed cuffs, also the fact that light and dark cloth are combined, in this instance silver gray with stone gray.

In some of the new models an outstanding point of interest is the shoulder treatment. A distinguishing note is the epaulet shoulder cut in one with the sleeve. Yoke effects are subtly embodied in the new wraps; indeed, yokes in every conceivable form characterize the present-day modes.

The man-tailored coat is a subject of vast import fashioned in smart woolen mixtures, tweeds, charmeen and handsome plaids. Velvet collars and double-breasted are the two prominent points of interest in these models.

Double-breasted top-coats developed from plaid shawls with fringe finish at the lower edge are among the novelties of the season. These preserve the conventional notched collar, and the long close-fitting sleeve.

There is quite a ripple of excitement caused by the sudden turn of the tide in favor of navy blue.

MRS. URQUHART GETS REWARD

Mrs. Urquhart of Omaha wants every housewife to share her good fortune in possessing a handsome reward. Here is what she says: "This is the way I did it. I answered an ad by writing for a free 10c bottle of Liquid Veneer and I found it so wonderful for dusting and polishing that I told fifteen of my friends about it and the makers sent me entirely free and postpaid, a great big, beautiful $2.00 Liquid Veneer Polishing Mop." Then Mrs. Urquhart goes on to say: "I am very proud and pleased with the reward given for what I have done, so will take great pleasure in showing it to friends."

Twenty thousand of these $2.00 Mops are going to be given away to housewives. Write for a free 10c bottle and ask for descriptive circular 15 telling how easily you, too, may have one of these mops. Address Liquid Veneer Company, Dept. L, Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

AILMENTS OF YOUNG GIRLS

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound School Teacher's Experience

Evanston, Wyoming.—"A few years ago I had troubles every month such as girls often have, and would suffer awfully every time. I was teaching school and it made it hard for me as I had to go to bed for two or three days. One day my mother suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it did wonders for me. In the course of a year I married and after my first baby was born I got up too soon and it caused a displacement. This troubled me so that I could hardly walk or do my housework. I knew what the Vegetable Compound did for me before so I took it again. It strengthened me and now I have five little kiddies. The eldest is six, the baby is five months old and I have twin boys three years old and a boy of five years. I do all my own housework, washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I owe my health to your wonderful medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."—Mrs. VERBENA CARPENTER, 127 2nd Avenue, Evanston, Wyoming.

Bank Note's Long Travels

After being gone for sixty years or thereabouts, a bank bill returned to its original home in the Old Colony National bank, at Plymouth, Mass. It has been framed under glass in a manner which shows both sides of the veteran, which is not much the worse for its travels about the world. It is a $1 note and the date of issue is 1865.

Get back that lost weight!

WHEN you start to waste away to a shadow, when the color leaves your cheeks and your poor, tired legs will hardly hold up your weakened body it's high time you started taking a fine tonic and builder like Tanlac.

Tanlac will build you up and make you feel that life's worth living. Made from roots, herbs and bark gathered from the four corners of the Earth and compounded under the exclusive Tanlac formula, Tanlac is just what the poor, starved body needs.

First of all it cleanses the blood stream and puts the digestive organs in order. You find, after a few days' treatment, that you want to eat. Pretty soon the welcome color steals back into your cheeks and the scales tell you that you're gaining weight. From then on it's only a short time until you're feeling fit as a fiddle.

Millions of men and women have taken Tanlac with great benefit. More than one hundred thousand people have written us glowing tributes to this wonderful tonic.

First Bottle Brought Improvement

"Pains in my side and back caused me lots of trouble day and night. I could hardly walk my beat. Tanlac fixed me up quick. I noticed the improvement after the first bottle."

Patrolman Wm. J. Bader 324 Paul Ave., Belleville, Ill.

When you know it has worked wonders for so many folks it's folly not to take advantage of Tanlac's help yourself. Don't put it off another day. Get a bottle at your druggist's now and start the good work right away.

R. A. Jorgenson and family, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. J. Jorgenson, of Garner, and the J. J. Poort family took an auto tour Sunday afternoon that took them for a visit at the fish hatchery at Clear Lake, and from there northwest to the pretty little town of Fertile, then on north to Joice and to the woods north of that town, then past Pilot Knob to Forest City and home. The trip makes a beautiful drive and if you do not know where to go take this little trip for pretty northern Iowa scenery.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson and son, "Buster" drove to Elmore, Minn. Friday evening in answer to a long distance call from Bert Stafford, linotype machinist, who wanted to overhaul the machine at our office. Mr. Stafford put our machine in shape in a short time and we took him to Mason City Saturday afternoon where he took a train for Des Moines to spend Sunday at home. Bert is always a welcome visitor at a linotype equipped print shop.

Fords Travel Across Rough Country and Across Open Fields

Cost of Operation less than 4c per Mile!

The Southwestern Gas & Electric Co., of Shreveport, La., operates a fleet of 27 FORDS with slip-on bodies. From June 30th, 1923, to June 30th, 1924, the fleet covered 210,778 miles, averaging more than 21 miles a day per car.

The cost of operation including gas, oil, parts and garage labor is less than 4 cents per mile. A 24-hour service is maintained and any man can reach any part of the system in twenty-five minutes with the FORD Delivery Car.

The average load carried by the Ford Cars is 700 pounds. The cars must travel through rough country and when necessary strike out across open fields and woods. They are used for general utility work, meter setting, service and pipe line inspection in the fields.

J. H. Macbeth, Superintendent of the Transportation says: "We found that the FORD Car best fitted for the class of work to be done. Buying heavy equipment would have been a useless expense and we didn't feel there was any other car of this type, on account of cost, that would give any added advantage."

Your nearest Authorized Ford Dealer, the Greimann Motor Co., Klemme, Iowa, can furnish you additional cost data on FORD Car and Truck operation in your business. Call for this service and a practical demonstration.
